The WEST SIDE said last week that the cameras did not lie, especially if Clare Irvine was behind it. But now comes Justice Irvine, who deposes and says that he don't believe it; in his own experience the camera, in Clare's hands, made his feet at least four times too big while his head scarcely shows; affiant further asserts that the situation should be reversed. This all comes from the judge having had his photo taken while asleep on the lawn, with his feet toward the machine.

"His big ears," says Eph Young, "were all that saved Marsh Merwin from falling into the river last Saturday." Pressed for an explanation, Eph said that he and D. B. Taylor were fishing near Marsh's hop yard and had landed what Marsh said was a Kentucky Red Horse. After a due inspection and discussion of the "fish," Marsh kept on plowing. In making a turn Marsh was eyeing the spot where the fish was placed and inadvertently swung himself and plow over the river bank. He had put the lines over his shoulders as plowboys do and Eph says he never saw such scrambling as Marsh done to get out of the entanglement, besides he was afraid that the old horse would back up on him. However no serious damage resulted, but the boys had a good laugh at Marsh's expense

Born and Raised in Polk County.

News was received that Robert Glase, a young man who was born and raised in this county, was recently found guilty of the murder of his partner, William Trewella, in San Francisco, and sentenced to life imprisonment. The Glase family is well known among the early settlers of this section of this state. An older brother, Til Glase, killed a man named Whitney in a duel at Dallas many years ago, and the feud that existed between the two families was very bitter. Robert Glase went to the Sandwich Islands, married a wealthy woman, and later became part owner with Trewella in the Windsor hotel, in San Francisco. The killing of Trewella was the result of domestic trouble between the Glase and Trewella families Glase's mother still resides near Falls City, this county.

A number of exchanges come this week, embellished with "supplements." Advice is cheap and we therefor offer it to those troubled with the "supplement" craze: Drop the five columns of patent ads and you will have room for home advertisers, besides doing away with the necessity of a "supplement." If all our contemporaries would cut off the "patent" ads, they would be more likely to receive foreign advertising; even from Portland houses. Try it, boys.

More About Summer Fallow.

A correspondent to the Oregonian from Silverton claims too much when he says summer fallow rests and resuscitates the land. The fact is the system has exactly the opposite effect.

Land well summer fallowed is in the best possible condition for sustaining micro-organic life, hence it is in soils thus treated, provided of course humus is present, that their activities reach the highest point. These micro-organisms are the farmer's friends when kept under proper control, but in the bare summer fallow they run riot. The functions of these organisms is to decompose the humus or organic substance of the soil and convert it into nitrogen in the form of nitrates which is the most valuable element of plant food. The summerfallow is a wasteful and pernicious system of farming, for the reason that it decomposes perhaps five times as much humus as is necessary for the maturing of the succeeding grain crop. The nitrates resulting from the decomposition of the humus are succeedingly soluble, hence that portion not used by the growing crop in an humid climate like the Willamette Valley is lost in the drainage water. This loss of valuable plant food in some instances is very great and it is possible that our present system of farming is responsible for a loss of soil nitrogen exceeding in value the wheat crop of the Valley.

Plant food is the farmer's capital, hence rather than follow a system of husbandry unnecessary destructive to this reserve, it is infinitely better to adopt a system of agriculture which will conserve this representative of wealth. A continuance of the present system of summer-fallowing and the continuous growing of cereals will sooner or later inevitably bring the farmer to a realization that he has made a grave blunder. His soil will not even respond to a well-cultivated summer-fallow, as there will be no humus to oxidize, hence no nitrogen, which means no crop. The office of humus is not confined to the single function of supplying nitrogen. It increases the available phosphates and potash of the soil and gives to the latter a texture that will increase its water-holding capacity nearly 20 per cent, which is not a small item in a period of drought.

As an example of what the continuous cropping with grain, or non humus forming crops will do to land, we will quote from the report of Chemist Snyder, of the Minnesota Experiment Station, on the Red River Valley soils. He writes that "the virgin soil contains from .35 to .40 of a per cent of nitrogen, while the soils which have been under cultivation for from 12 to 15 years contains from .2 to .3 of a per cent." This represents a loss of approximately 4500 pounds of nitrogen per acre. The 15 crops of wheat of 25 bushels per acre would require 525 pounds of nitrogen, or one-eighth of the amount which the soil lost during the 12 or 15 years of cropping. If the nitrogen of this soil had been properly conserved it would have been sufficient to grow over 100 crops of 25 bushels of wheat per acre.

My advice to your correspondent would be to substitute a rotation system of farming for the summer fallow. Grow more clover, vetch, peas, etc., and keep more stock. Convert the crude material of the farm into finished products, such as butter, cheese, beef, mutton, pork, etc. This will afford larger returns from the farm and materially add to the capital in the form of increased fertility of the soil. The leguminous crops mentioned will materially assist in smothering out some of the weeds, but in case they do not succeed in this, instead of resorting to the bare summer fallow, plant corn, or sow rape in drills and cultivate. The corn will make good silage, affording excellent succulent winter feed for cows, young stock and sheep, and the rape will put the flock in the best of condition to enter winter. This system does not necessarily mean the discontinuance of wheat-growing, but rather a restricted area and increased yield.

Yours respectfully,
James Withycombe.

The common remedy for the poisoning by poison oak is to wash in a solution of common salt. An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure, and Thomas Howell, the leading botanist of the Northwest, says that if persons going among poison oak wash their faces, ears neck, hands and wrists, in short every exposed part, with sweet spirits of nitre, it will prevent them from being poisoned.

Drying preparations simply develop dry catarrh; they dry up the secretions, which adhere to the membrane and decompose, causing a far more serious trouble than the ordinary form of catarrh. Avoid all drying inhalants, fumes, smokes and snuffs and use that which cleanses, soothes and heals. Ely's Cream Balm is such a remedy and will cure catarrh or cold in the head easily and pleasantly. A trial size will be mailed for 10 cents. All druggists sell the 50c. size. Ely Brothers, 56 Warren St., N.Y.

The Balm cures without pain, does not irritate or cause sneezing. It spreads itself over an irritated and angry surface, relieving immediately the painful inflammation.
