NEXT WEEK AT THE ISIS

For the first time in many weeks, the theater will be dark on Monday and Tuesday nights as well as Thursday night. On Wednesday night, Bryant Washburn appears in "Venus in the East." When Wallace Irwin wrote it he turned out one of the snappiest stories that had yet come from his busy typewriter. There's action in every line and there's suspense and surprise and a bit of heart throb in it, too. Irwin is a mighty clever reader of human nature, and he has ripped the masks off from some of the types that stand on pedestals. For these reasons, "Venus in the East" makes as big a hit on the screen as it did in the Saturday Evening Post. The evening's bill is still further featured by a good comedy—James Montgomery Flagg's "The Last Bottle." It is a tale of the present with the country as dry as a tooth powder.

On Friday night, Fatty Arbuckle in "His Wedding Night" is the side show with Dorothy Gish in "Boots" as the main attraction. When Miss Gish created her famous part of "The Little Disturber" in "Hearts of the World," she set the younger set of the nation to doing two separate and distinct things. One was to walk like "The Little Disturber" and the other was to wear "tams" with jaunty side sweep. Millinery shops all over the country made them and sold them by the thousands. So when "Boots" comes to the Isis on Friday night, the girls of Independence will have still another or item to add to their wardrobes. It is a new and still jaunty "tam" with bells on it. Part of the picture was photographed in London and part in Los Angeles, but it seems impossible to tell which is which. "So," says Manager Nelson of the Isis, "when you see the London fog in 'Boots' remember it's not all London. But don't come and ask me which is London and which is Los Angeles, because I don't know. You will have to write to Dorothy to find out."

The famous Japanese actor, Sessue Hayakawa, will be seen Saturday night in "His Birthright." It is the dramatic story of a Japanese boy who sought to revenge the wrongs done his mother. He planned to kill his American father but when they came face to face after a death grapple with the German spies, the boy changed his mind.

The old play, "The Squaw Man" is billed for Sunday night. Someone had said that in order to successfully entertain the public the dramatist must make them laugh, make them wait, make them cry. "The Squaw Man" does all these things. Many probably recall the plot—how Jim Wynnegate to save his cousin's reputation, because of his regard for the latter's wife, assumes guilt for a crime committed by his relative and leaves his home in England for a ranch in Wyoming. There, it will be recalled, he is saved from death by the hands of a gun-fighter by a girl of the Ute Indian tribe, and in gratitude finally
