PROMINENT WRITER AND POET AT CHAUTAUQUA

Marshall Louis Mertins Comes on the Second Night.

Author, lecturer, humorist and staff poet of the Kansas City Star, Marshall Louis Mertins, who comes to Chautauqua Festival on the second night, has made a decided impression in the lecture and literary fields of today.

He discusses his subjects with the sagacious and optimism of youth, yet he is a deep student and a consistent thinker, and his addresses bear the stamp of the man who has mastered his subject.

Into his lectures, "Bricks Without Straw," he weaves a world of humor and brightens his splendid inspirational subject with poems from his latest book, "The Wishing Gate and Other Poems."

THE SPOOKS AND GOBLINS ARE WITH US THIS WEEK

The proverbial old witch has been riding thru the skies on her rustic broom stick this week and causing much riotous fun and pleasant entertaining.

Hobgoblins and witches have reigned supreme with grown-ups and wee tots alike.

On Monday evening Dr. and Mrs. O. D. Butler very pleasantly entertained the Owls. This being the first meeting of the season, the members enjoyed the talk-fest as well as the several games of whist. Four tables of players indulged in their chosen game, the Owls mingling bravely with the witches, broom sticks and black cats which the hostess used for decorations. In keeping with the jolly occasion the luncheon consisted of pumpkin pie and cider.

Last evening Miss Florence Burton entertained the Autowins with a Hallowe'en party and this afternoon she is continuing the festivities for the members of the Tating and Merrimakers clubs and a few other friends.

Out Burbanking Burbank

B. L. Johnson of Independence has some original ideas about squash growing. He reasons that as the wheat plant takes from the soil the material to make the grain and the hen takes the grain to manufacture eggs, it should be possible for the roots of the squash plant to find the same material in the earth and manufacture a plant that is a combination of egg and squash that would be handy in making pie.—Monmouth Herald.

The Flag and Victory

(By a sixth grade pupil.)
Hurrah for the flag
As it flies on high,
I see it from the crag
As it flutters in the sky.
I see the wings of victory
As she flies in the air,
She is the friend of liberty
So wonderful and fair.
So let us be glad
That she does these things,
That she takes this as a fad
To fly on her own wings.

AT THE ISIS NEXT WEEK

Douglas Fairbanks comes Sunday night in his best photoplay, "The Knickerbocker Buckaroo." It's a yarn as merry and happy as Doug himself. It starts in a New York club and winds up in a Mexican town. The picture is full of ginger, laughs and stunts. For example: Doug leaves the window of a flying train, climbs over the car's side to the roof, runs along the roof to the mail coach, is swung from that car to the station by the mail conveyer like a sack of mail, dropping onto the back of a horse that gallops madly off.

On Monday night, the eighth and ninth episodes of the serial, "The Lost Express" will be shown. The other attraction of the evening is Ann Murdock in "My Wife." The story concerns a beautiful young woman who married to save her fortune. Then she fell in love with—who do you suppose? Why her husband! The play is full of situations that might easily be risqué in less capable hands, but as it is presented it is one of the most delightful of comedies.

"Eye for Eye", a screen drama of the intense and colorful life of the Far East, in which the supreme actress, Nazimova, is seen in the fiery role of Hassouma, a young and beautiful girl, will be the feature Tuesday night. It is a picture which arrests the attention and expands the imagination—transporting the beholder to the heart of things Oriental and mysterious and telling a story of intrigue and passion, which is not to be surpassed. As this passionate and primitive girl of the desert Nazimova displays great artistry.

Remember when you used to be thrilled by hearing ghost stories and couldn't sleep all night and'd be afraid of the goblins that'd git you if you didn't watch out? Well, that's "The Haunted Bedroom," the Wednesday night show. It'll send delightful little shivers up your back, and make your spine tingle. Miss Enid Bennett plays the part of a newspaper reporter who is sent to find out about a so-called haunted house. On the same night, cock-eyed Ben Turpin and gang amuse you in "No Mother To Guide Him."

One of those gripping stories of the North woods, with their play of elemental passions against the background of nature is promised in Monroe Salisbury's "The Blinding Trail" which tells of the fate that befell "Big Jim" McKenzie, lumber boss. Caught up in the swirl of love and hate and jealousy, McKenzie felt Fate's crushing blow when blinded by accident he found that his wife had played false with him. How he fought against his fate and how true love at last came to him make up an engrossing tale with a strong punch at the finish. Thursday night.

Lassiter and Venters and Jane, and all the other famous characters of Zane Grey's great novel of Western life, "Riders of the Purple Sage" will be here on Friday night. We know that nothing so appeals to a true-blue American as a drama set in the heart of America. If any doubt as to this conclusion remained, we would only have to mention that William Farnum portrays the great role of Lassiter. The announcement of such a combination—Zane Grey, a Western writer, William Farnum, supreme in Western characterizations, and a setting that embraces the vast purple-tinted mesas of the Great Southwest—alone is sufficient to thrill every picture lover.

The big show on Saturday night consists of William Desmond in "Bare-Fisted Gallagher", the Ford Weekly and a comedy. It is a pleasure to announce that the Ford Weekly will be shown every Saturday night until further notice.

The following week opens with a Cecil B. De Mille production, "For Better, For Worse."
