Dress
the Boy

It will pay you to let us clothe the boy from cap to shoe. While it takes money to keep a boy going these days, we can help you reduce the high cost of boys if you'll come to our store, look at the stock and get the prices. Yes, by all means, bring the little fellow in and let us put one of our nifty suits on him. How well he will look! You won't be able to beat the price anywhere, quality considered. Our Boys' Suits not only look well but they wear well. They were made with the idea that boys are hard on clothes and the suits will stand much abuse. While you're in, just as well buy him a cap, shirts, underwear and shoes. Satisfactory goods at satisfactory prices all the time.

MANJAK BETTER THAN PAINT

New Material is Said to Have Highest Value as a Preservative of Metals.

Manjak is rapidly coming into use in the Trinidad oil fields as a preservative of metals because of its toughness, its excellent insulating property, its resistance to heat and its imperviousness to water and air.

Manjak is an almost pure bitumen, much like asphalt in its chemical composition, but while asphalt melts at 100 degrees Fahrenheit, manjak needs more than 400 degrees Fahrenheit to melt it. It is 80 to 90 per cent carbon, the rest being hydrogen and a small quantity of sulphur. It looks like coal, is odorless, hard, brittle and easily separated in its long, pencil-shaped grain. When melted and applied in a liquid state it hardens to an almost unbreakable rubberlike coating. It is used for painting pipe lines, boilers, chimneys, sprocket wheels, pinions and other ironware and machinery. It is especially efficacious on the joints of the pipes used in drilling for oil, on car trucks, fenders, iron cans which are submerged in brine, also on the roofs of cars.

There are large deposits of manjak near the great asphalt lake in Trinidad, also some in Utah, Cuba and Barbados.
