The best fighting in the world today appears to be in Ireland.

A scandal in the family has blasted Doug Fairbanks' presidential boom.

Numerous Democrats object to following Woodrow to the end of the rope.

Another of the evils growing out of the war is that Congress cannot adjourn.

The Polk County Observer has become so familiar with Senator Chamberlain that it calls him "Joe."

It's coming sooner or later. Our little brown brothers on the south side of the Rio Grande will have to be spanked.

Hi Johnson is having lots of fun with the Republican bosses now, but where they'll get Hi will be down at the Chicago convention.

The Country Editor is Worrying About the Price and Scarcity of Paper.—Oregonian cartoon.

If the Oregonian would turn over two pages of its Sunday edition to the "country editors" everybody would be happy.

THE RHYMING SUMMARIST

Summer zephyrs are blowing in
And it makes a fellow lazy,
Sadie is out with a brand new frock
And looks quite swell and daisy;
Naughty weeds are coming up,
It'll soon be time for hoeing,
And dandelion spawns
On the lawns
Starts the women mowing.

The kids are restless—fussy like,
School interest it is dimming,
So speed on good old days
When its bully swimming;
A bath tub never interests boys
And there are a score or thirty
Who by their looks
And study books
We would say are dirty.

Curtis Grant just back from Tennessee
Gives us facts and figures,
The reason Oregon is his choice—
It has no snakes and niggers;
In our garden spot of the world
We ought to all be happy,
And sing away
Every day
Stepping high and snappy.

SUNSET

(By Dora Reeves Croft)

Long the golden sunshine falls—
'Cross the bridge and o'er the walls;
Falling, falling, ever falling;
'Cross the bridge and o'er the wall
Softly, softly sunlight calling,
Thus the golden sunbeams fall.

Deep and shadowy sunset falls—
O'er the old and crumbling walls;
Fading, fading, ever fading,
Clouds thru golden glory wading;
Slowly, slowly, piling higher,
Dying out in crimson fire.

Long the crimson sunset fades
'Cross the hills and o'er the glades;
Creepy shades of evening calling;
Gold and crimson shadows falling
'Cross the bridge and o'er the walls,
Thus the golden sunset falls.

Newspaper Making

(Portland Journal)

A bill before the New York legislature provides a heavy penalty for those who knowingly furnish newspapers with false information for publication.

The bill hits at the root of what some people believe is wilful newspaper misrepresentation. Papers are frequently criticized for errors and there are people who declare "that they don't believe anything they read in the papers."

The public generally fails to realize that editors are compelled to separate the true from the false in a very few minutes. They are called upon to pass on scores of articles in a short time because of the very great element of speed in the news world. And they are forced to pass judgment on news which in practically every instance comes from an outside source.

Papers do not manufacture news. The source is with men who are doing things. They are authority for the article, and if incorrect information is given reporters, unless on its face it is questionable, there is little opportunity for investigation. It is the dispenser of news that makes the error, not the newspaper which attempts to give the public all the news within a few minutes after its appearance.

On the other hand, it is marvelous that so few errors are made, so few facts questioned. Hundreds upon hundreds of stories are printed without an error. Seldom it is that in all the quotations, and in all the presentations of various facts, that the newspaper is incorrect. A surprisingly low percentage of errors is found, even though the newspaper, like every other establishment, must depend on the human element.

There are papers that make little effort to find the truth. There are papers that distort facts and color the news to suit the own purposes. But the great body of respectable and conservative newspapers in America make every effort possible to supply the news without addition or subtraction, without interpretation or taint.

The New York bill will aid those papers in combatting those who disseminate false misinformation.

The Horrible Things.

The whole town is worried about them.

He is a fascinating man just approaching the forties, a man of good appearance and intelligence with a drab little field-mouse of a wife.

She is a widow, young and lovely, with a sidelong, provocative glance, a slender figure and a positive genius for wearing the most becoming clothes.

They live next door.

The whole town is worrying about them. Some are resentful some would give them the benefit of the doubt, some watch with bated breaths, some there are that cannot understand.

You see, they haven't created a scandal!
