High Praise Is Given To Oak Point School

Dr. William C. Bagley, of Teachers' College, New York, has an interesting article in the May number of the "Progressive Teacher." Dr. Bagley was here last fall and visited the rural center at Oak Point. It is to this school he refers. —Editor.

"A few days ago I received letters from two children who live in Oregon. They wrote as representatives of a rural school that I had the privilege of visiting last fall. The letters told me that I should shortly receive a package by parcel post, and that the package would contain a jar of potted chicken, which had been prepared by the children as one of the products of the poultry yard which the school operates. The package came in due course, and the potted chicken was made into the piece de resistance of a delectable dinner, serving also as the text of a little homily directed to the younger member of the family on the value of the poultry industry as a means of reducing the H. C. of L. In spite of this moralizing, however, the chicken was enjoyed—in the well known phrase, "a good time was had by all."

"I do not refer to this personal experience for the sake of suggesting to this large and representative audience that similar contributions to the family larder will always be welcome, but rather to call your attention to a little school in the open country that has gone a long way toward realizing what I consider to be the important aim of rural education.

"This school, as I have said, operates a poultry yard. Pure-bred poultry is its specialty in the one case; pure-bred seed corn in the other. Its profits come from the selling of settings of eggs and from the selling of corn for seed purposes. With these profits the school plant is improved. Through added interest, a large community room has been added to the school building by the district. An attractive fireplace gives a homelike atmosphere, not only to the community room, but to the class-room into which it opens. Comfortable chairs, a small library and a library table contribute to this home-like atmosphere. In another part of the building is a kitchen where the children prepare their warm luncheons and where, I imagine, my potted chicken was put up. "Now, it is clear enough that a school might realize the aim of rural education without operating a poultry yard or a seed garden; it is equally true that it might possess these and other adjuncts and still fall short of being a good school. But a prime essential of effective rural education, I am sure, is that the rural school shall make an intelligent use of the rich educative environment that surrounds it. In this particular school the poultry yard and the garden were sources of educational materials and radiated studies in arithmetic, in geography, in elementary science and in language. In part, they were ends in themselves, but only in part; of far greater importance was their service to larger ends. They were a starting point from which the pupils were led out into a wider world; their contacts were multiplied; their horizon was extended."
