FISH IS NOT POPULAR FOOD

With the Wonderful Supply at Their Command, People of the United States Eat Little.

Americans have been noted for the lavish and often reckless manner in which they have used the national resources but, strangely, the vast resources of our seas and lakes have not been used as the other nations of the world use theirs. The people of the United Kingdom eat about sixty-five pounds of fish each, each year; Sweden, 52 pounds; Norway, 44 pounds; Canada, 30 pounds, and the United States, 16 pounds. Our comparatively insignificant consumption is due to sluggish demand and not to scarcity of fish. The seas adjacent to our shores are vast reservoirs of food produced without effort on the part of man, and our Great Lakes hold unsurpassed stores of fresh-water fishes. We have at our command a greater variety of fine food fishes and shellfishes than any other country, but we do not use them as we must eventually, for in the future we must draw an ever-increasing supply of our food from the waters as the land becomes less able to supply the needs of the increasing population.

TIT FOR TAT

Mrs. Justwed—Those pearls make a lovely birthday gift. Thank you so much. But I have a confession to make. This isn't really my twenty-fourth birthday. I've always lied about my age.

Her Husband—That's all right. Those aren't genuine pearls.

"WATER TENNIS" POPULAR.

A new sport now rapidly gaining favor on the Pacific coast is known as "water tennis," says Popular Mechanics Magazine. It is really an adaptation of lawn tennis to the swimming pool, and is described as a great hot weather diversion. When splashing about after the rubber ball in a shallow pond protected from the sun by surrounding foliage, all the exercise and sport of the dry land game are derived, without the annoying heat and perspiration.
