Italy Electrifies Railroads.
Rome.—The Italian state railways are bit by bit being electrified. Every now and then the government undertakes to add 300 or 400 miles of electrification to the system. By the end of 1922, there will be more than 2,000 miles of electrified state railways in Italy. This is expected to reduce the coal consumption of the railroads by about one-third.

OR SOMETHING ELSE.
Ted—What's the matter with you that you have to see the doctor?
Ned—I'm not just sure, but I think it's because I've been reading a lot of health books.
The man who is in constant fear of death belittles the very life he hates to lose.
