THE HORSEMAN.

Sometimes horses are affected with indigestion and dizziness, the result of standing idle in the stable. The remedy is to turn the affected animal out to exercise and substitute whole oats and bran for corn.

It is expensive carelessness to latch a warm horse inadequately protected from raw winds or a drizzling rain. Blanket him when you hitch.

The stallion that is worked regularly every day will get the most and best colts.

Any man who will strike a horse in the head should never be allowed to touch one again.

If possible plan for dry box stalls with dirt floors in which to winter the colts. If this is impossible keep the stalls well bedded and clean to prevent accidents from slipping.

Pick out a sire with a good disposition. Never raise a colt from a naturally vicious tempered mare. Peculiarities of disposition are almost invariably transmitted.
