The White Terror

A Story With a Purpose

It is one year since the eventful meeting between Matthew Brand and Emmerson Boyd, when Eleanor Boyd made peace between them. Eleanor has returned from the sanatorium thoroughly cured, and she has been the bride of Matthew Brand these six months.

Everytown promptly expressed its gratitude when its people read in the columns of the New Clarion this unexpected announcement:

CLEANING UP EVERYTOWN, NOTED MILLIONAIRE, EMMERSON BOYD, BECOMES A PHILANTHROPIST. WILL DEVOTE IMMENSE FORTUNE TO IMPROVING CONDITIONS IN OUR COMMUNITY.

Boyd's first step was to found a handsome sanatorium for the treatment of tuberculosis, which he endowed and turned over to the Everytown Anti-tuberculosis society. He tore down the old tenements of the Boyd corporation and put up rows of individual brick houses with latest sanitary improvements. He raised the scale of pay in the various departments and subsidiary companies of the Boyd corporation to give the men a living wage, and he reconstructed his different buildings to provide clean, healthful surroundings for his employees. Reading and lunch rooms in his factories were among the reforms he inaugurated.

In addition he bought a tract of seven acres on the outskirts of the city and presented it to Everytown as a park, "in memory," he said before the common council, "of my late beloved wife."

At the elaborate banquet given Boyd at the dedication of the Boyd sanatorium a popular toast was pronounced by Matthew Brand when he arose and said:

"Here's to the health of Emmerson Boyd, Everytown's great benefactor."
"This demonstration has moved me more than I can tell," spoke Emmerson

Brand Was Able to Be About Again.

Boyd, rising amid the applause which greeted his name. "I am now convinced that the lesson of true happiness in this life is taught only by each individual following the dictates of his conscience."

He aroused still further favor when he said, waving a sheet of printed paper before him:

"I am going to urge the legislature to adopt the following amendments to the state labor law:

"First—All factories shall be well lighted, well ventilated and kept clean. All gases, vapors, dust or other impurities injurious to health which are generated in manufacturing processes shall be as far as practicable rendered harmless.

"Second—Adequate washing and sanitary facilities shall be provided.

"Third—Hoods, suction pipes, fans or blowers shall be provided for the protection of persons using emery wheels or other apparatus which produce particles of dust injurious to the health of the employees.

"Fourth—Suitable receptacles for excretion shall be provided for in all factories.

"Fifth—Women shall be provided with suitable seats in shops and child labor shall be properly regulated.

"Sixth—There shall be medical examination of all help."

"Seventh—A Sanitary Housing Commission shall be formed, the chairman of which shall be a physician, which commission will have power to compel landlords to provide sanitary dwellings for their tenants.

"Eighth—A Commission for the Prevention of Tuberculosis to be created, having an appropriation of $100,000 placed at its disposal. This commission to investigate as to the best possible means to halt the ravages of 'The White Terror.'"

The enthusiasm of the citizens rose to a still higher pitch when Brand said these words:

"I propose another toast, ladies and gentlemen. Here's to the decreased death rate of Everytown. It has fallen off 8 per cent in the last year, and during the next twelve months we believe it will go still lower. Also we should drink to the new Workmen's Compensation board, the Free Municipal Dispensary established through Mr. Boyd's influence and to the trained nurses brought to Everytown at his expense to work among the poor."

It was the new Emmerson Boyd who walked from the banquet hall with Eleanor and Matthew Brand.

"I never knew until the last year," he said gravely, "how much happiness there is to be gained in working to benefit your fellow townspeople. We will make Everytown the model city of the country."

"Yes, father," Eleanor whispered softly. "I know you will, and I know you are doing just what mother would have you do."

An Ingenious Elevator.

A novel and ingenious combination of elevator and stairway has been invented for use in places where lack of space prohibits the installation of either an elevator or a stairway, says Popular Mechanics. The apparatus consists of two steps that operate in a small shaft and move up or down alternately under the pressure of the foot. At each corner of the shaft is a post with its outer face provided with spaced teeth and the front and rear posts are used respectively for supporting the front and rear steps. Each step is provided with a counterweight and is supported on the posts by means of hinged arms that engage the teeth in ascending one stands on one step and allows the other to rise a convenient distance under the action of the counterweight, when the hinged arm engages the teeth in the higher position and holds the step in place. The steps are worked alternately in this fashion until the desired floor is reached. In descending the steps are released alternately by pressure of the foot against strips that control the arms, and the steps are forced down to the next lower level. Means for holding the steps stationary at each floor are provided, while ropes suspended from the steps and so arranged as to release the arms from the teeth allow the apparatus to be pulled down readily by a person on a lower floor.

Tin Rapidly Disappearing.

With regard to the future use of tin, it may be said that we are dealing with the one metal whose known ore reserves are entirely inadequate to even the present demands and that unless some new source of supply is developed very soon we may expect to find that tin is a very scarce metal indeed, says the Engineering Magazine. Of the present sources of tin ore supply most are either stationary or receding in output, Bolivia being the only one which gives promise of permanency and of future growth. Under these conditions the question of substitute metals becomes of importance, and aluminum, zinc and steel all have some possibilities in this direction in one way or another.

Car Weight and Tire Pressure.

That the pressure in an automobile tire, fully pumped up, remains practically the same whether the car is resting on the tires or is laced up is the discovery made by one of the large rubber companies in an endeavor to solve some questions of "earing for tires while the car is laid up," says the Scientific American. It was found by means of special gauges that in an ordinary sized tires, which shows a pressure of eighty pounds while the car is laced up, it will show 80.4 pounds with the weight of the car resting on the tires. The cubic contents are compressed by "fattening" from 900 cubic inches to 896 cubic inches.
