SHOOT AWAY $24,000,000.

Tremendous Cost of War Illustrated by the Battle of Verdun. If the estimate of 2,000,000 shells approximately the number fired in the great Verdun battle the financial outlay to the contending armies for artillery ammunition alone has been at least $20,000,000 to $24,000,000.

This estimate of army ordnance experts is based on the theory that the bulk of the fighting has been done with 75 centimeter field guns. Inasmuch as the Germans have made use of a considerable number of large field pieces and siege guns, the cost in artillery ammunition probably has been considerably more than $24,000,000.

As the caliber of a gun increases the cost per round multiplies rapidly. The huge German guns which demolished the Liege fortifications and shelled Dunkirk from a distance of twenty miles or more hurl projectiles that cost many hundreds of dollars, the exact figures not being known.

In addition to the enormous cost of artillery ammunition used in the Verdun fight, many millions of rounds of small arms ammunition have been consumed, the outlay for hospital service has been excessively high, while the loss of effective fighting units has been enormous on both sides.

The only knowledge that a man has is the knowledge that he can use.—Lord Macaulay.
