Barnumizing Mayors.

 What is Oregon coming to, that its mayors seem perpetually in danger, either of the ax or falling victims to some designing female? It was but a few weeks ago that the chief magistrate of Portland trembled for his good name because of an attempt made upon him by an alleged gang of blackmailers who used a handsome daughter of Eve as a decoy. That was bad enough in all conscience. But the Medford episode is worse and makes us really solicitous for the fame of the state which produces such fine crops of hops, wool, wheat and rain. To think of hurling at a mayor a weapon which has been solemnly consecrated to chicken! It is too much. What, we wonder, does Mayor Harper think of the proceeding? He must thank his lucky stars that his good angel has directed his life in these pleasant southern pastures, where every prospect pleases and no man is vile enough to launch at him a heavy piece of steel which has been carefully trimmed on one end to razor blade symmetry.

On re-perusing the Medford item it is found that the mayor ducked his head as the ax was aimed at him, and then turned and fled for his life. Now, gently, and with all due deference, we put the question to Oregon: "Is this the right way to treat a mayor?" We know that it is the bounden duty of the true American to make the life of the mayor of his town as unbearable as possible in order that he may be encouraged to run again, but we had fondly imagined that all respectable citizens drew the line at an ax. No man can be expected to maintain that dignity of manner and calm poise which we associate with the chief magistrate, when he is fleeing down a back alley in a violent effort to outrace an ax. We sincerely hope that Oregon always will remain woolly, but it need not stay wild. It must separate its goats from its sheep.—Los Angeles Times.
