DENATURED ALCOHOL

The name "Alcohol" is composed of two Arabic words, "al kohl," meaning "the devil," which goes to show that the Arabs knew a thing or two.

"Denatured alcohol," as the further name somewhat vaguely indicates, means alcohol which has been put through a process by which it is rendered poisonous and hence unfit for use as a basis for intoxicants or for use in patent medicines.

The removal of the internal tax on the making of it reduces the price of such denatured alcohol from 2.50 to 25 cents a gallon, and is done with a view to furnishing cheaper light, fuel and transportation.

The advocates of the measure have predicted many marvelous things for the future under the new regime. It is contended that its use as a substitute for gasoline will reduce the cost of running automobiles to a very large extent; that it will supplant kerosine for lighting purposes; that it will be used for heating our houses; that it will revolutionize the making of smokeless powder, etc.
