GROWTH OF ST. LOUIS
Changes Made In City's Century of Existence.

CELEBRATING ITS CENTENNIAL
Missouri Metropolis, Once Little Settlement and Now Country's Fourth City, Rejoices In Its Advancement. Some Ancient Customs.

St. Louisans are rejoicing at present over the completion of the first century of their city's incorporated existence. Naturally the thing that gives them the greatest joy is the comparison of the growth of the Missouri metropolis from a little settlement to the splendid position of fourth among American cities. St. Louis now ranks after New York, Chicago and Philadelphia.

St. Louis has always been noted for its civic pride. But as in 1807 St. Louis had less than 200 houses it is not easy to understand now how its leading citizens could meet on the corners of its only two thoroughfares and discuss it then as one of the most important towns in the country. This some of them certainly did. They left the record of their prophecies to be read now, when in the last ten years about half a million more people have come into the United States across the Atlantic than the total number of "the American people" in the year after St. Louis was first incorporated.

Had Good Opinions of Themselves.
With not quite 7,250,000 people in the United States and not quite a thousand of them in St. Louis a hundred years ago, they were certainly the most important people in the world then. Even then the world suspected it. It was almost convinced that they could "take care of themselves" and build up their country. There is no doubt of it left when, with over 80,000,000 people in the United States, St. Louis in one year of its twentieth century growth has spent over $20,000,000 for new buildings. This is several millions in cash more than the total amount of cash in the United States in 1809.

In the St. Louis of 1809 the visitor by walking up one street and down another could see every house in the town in less than an hour. It would be a strange world to return to, but some might still be charmed with it. There was no roar and no rattle in it or in a thousand miles of it. There might have been so many as half a dozen coaches or family carriages of the kind George Washington used to ride in, but they were used only on state occasions. The two wheeled charette, or French cart, drawn by a single Canadian pony, satisfied the speed mania in business during the week and sufficed for most people's pleasure on holidays. The very first of the first colonial families of the town used one of these same carts while it was in process of arriving. It had acquired a carriage in 1809 without becoming ashamed of the cart or of the neighbors who still sat in it, with the blouse of the driver worn over his trousers—if he wore trousers in 1809.

Wore Breeches, Not Trousers.
In that year gentlemen of the best breeding and family still thought trousers undignified. They wore breeches, not "pants." The breeches still had silver buckles at the knees, and the shoes had silver buckles. There were still old school gentlemen of great dignity who wore their dress swords when they promenaded in public. Gentlemen of the Jeffersonian school followed the "Jacobin" fashion of wearing trousers with legs long enough to fall over their shoe tops, and the fashion was gaining fast. It was supposed in some mysterious way to stand for liberty, fraternity and equality, and some Federalist gentlemen of the old school held out in their knee breeches against it as long as possible on that account. But they were not too haughty to stop on the corner and beg the latest news from some one who had become prominent by getting a letter three weeks old from Philadelphia or New York. The man who knew the latest national politics was a prominent man even if it had been a month coming by mail from Philadelphia. They thought two weeks long enough to wait for a mail, but if they had to wait a month they enjoyed the news all the more when it came.

Not Much Excitement Then.
With no paved streets, no water-works, no street lights, no steam whistles, no phonographs, no living picture shows and nothing modern to excite it during the day, the town snuffed out its tallow candles soon after dark and went to sleep. It seldom grew as much excited about anything whatever as it now does every day on Broadway during the baseball season when the score is being bulletined. The greatest business excitement was seen when some one caught the noise of songs and shouting as a fleet of keel boats and canoes returned from the Missouri or the Arkansas after six months or more of trading. The rush for the river front then might have suggested the modern interest in a baseball score, but there was nothing else approaching it.

Vest Pocket Rogues' Gallery.
A vest pocket rogues' gallery is to be established in Evanston, Ill., as the latest weapon against sweet loungers, hoboes and petty thieves. The police will be equipped with "watch" cameras, a developing room will be installed at the police station, and a rogues' gallery to be made up of miniatures will be started.
