WILL FLY IN EUROPE

Charles K. Hamilton will show new stunts to English and Scotch.

New York, June 20.—Charles K. Hamilton, the aviator, has announced to friends here his intention of going abroad before the end of the Summer for the purpose of attempting a flight from London to Edinburgh. A prize of $50,000 will go to the first aviator accomplishing this feat. The distance is approximately 400 miles and according to the terms of the offer the aviator may make two landings between the cities.

If Paulhan or some other dangerous rival should show any intention of making the attempt, Hamilton said he would change his plans to enable him to be ready to start on the race as soon as any other aviator.

According to figures compiled by Hamilton, more than $300,000 in prize money for various flights has recently been offered in Europe. He hopes to follow up a trip from London to Edinburgh with tries at some of the other large prizes.

Hamilton, who recently flew to Philadelphia and return the same day, said last night that he will enter the Chicago-New York race.

"There is not any doubt about the feasibility of such a trip," he said. "The race will be run and won."

Hamilton will ship his biplane to Nashville, Tenn., where he has been engaged to give an exhibition at the military tournament. The New York Times gave him a luncheon yesterday, at which Glenn H. Curtiss, unable to be present, caused to be read a letter congratulating Hamilton on the "glory of successfully accomplishing the most daring flight in the history of aviation."
