

JACKSONVILLE POST
Official Paper of the City of Jacksonville, Oregon

A weekly newspaper published every Saturday at the county seat of Jackson County, Oregon. D. W. BAGSHAW, Editor.

Entered as second-class matter June 22, 1907, at the post office at Jacksonville, Oregon, under Act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 6, 1910

SUBSCRIPTION: One year by mail $1.50. Advertising rates furnished on application.

The result of the election Monday shows that the people are in earnest in their demand for water, and will back up the council in all proper efforts to obtain the same. It is now up to the latter to hasten the installation of the plant in every manner possible; no need or excuse for holding back for fear of not being sustained. The voters have said in no uncertain terms (66 to 1), "give us water," and we believe that the council will endeavor to begin active construction in a few weeks. The bonds voted should find a ready market; the plans and surveys are made; the engineer assures a sufficient quantity of water, and it seems that further delay is unnecessary. Get busy.

With the cement sidewalks now in course of construction; bonds voted to provide a system of waterworks [the surveys and plans have been already made]; an electric road in prospect; a factory to employ 2000 men seriously discussed; the improvement of hundreds of acres of wild land now in progress, etc. it looks like Jacksonville is at last coming into her own. Yes, prosperity is heading this way, and it is bound to arrive soon, but it will come faster if every citizen will do what he can, be it much or little, to assist. Will you do it?

As Cartoonist Hart Pictures the Appointment of Gov. C. E. Hughes

While no one expects some 90,000,000 people to all agree on what a president of the United States does or does not do, the appointment of Governor Hughes of New York to the supreme court by President Taft met with the approval of people who look upon the Empire State's chief executive as a student of law. Artist Hart of the Philadelphia Press has given the public a cartoon that pictures the sentiment of many people.

A Point For Willie.

A Capitol bill woman went out in the garage back of her home the other day and found her ten-year-old son playing cards with pennies with a neighbor boy.

"Why, Willie," she said, "what are you doing—gambling?"

"We're just playin' cards with that new deck you won over at Mrs. Mason's playin' bridge last week," replied the boy.

The woman picked up the cards and went back into the house. She had nothing to say.—Denver Post.

She Ate It

In Belgium the month of May is known as the Virgin's month and consecrated to the Virgin Mary. In the province of Liege during May young girls have a pretty way of learning whom they shall marry. A group of maidens arrange to meet at sunrise, walk through the fields until they come to a hedge, and, selecting a spot unexposed to the highway, they choose a honeysuckle bush beneath which to perform their mystic rites. Each girl selects three blades of grass, cuts the tops to equal lengths and to each ties a colored thread of silk. Black represents a bachelor, red an unknown lover and green the person the girl in her heart wishes to marry. Ten days afterward they return to the spot where they left the blades growing, and that blade of the three which has grown highest represents the lover that is destined for the maiden's husband.

There lived in this province a poor girl named Anna DeWint. She was an adopted daughter of an old couple who worked a small farm. Anna was a fair complexioned, fair haired, blue eyed maiden, her pure heart being plainly manifest in her countenance. The adjoining farm on the east was a much larger one and owned by a farmer named DeRoade, with one son, Helleger. Helleger DeRoade was at the university when Anna DeWint came to live at the adjoining farm. When he returned for his spring vacation he saw her busy about the adjoining premises, but she was so far from him that he could not tell whether she was comely or ugly. Taking a glass, he brought the image nearer and discovered what he was pleased to call his "Madonna."

From that time when he would see Anna on the porch of the house or back in the kitchen garden he would watch her through his glass and longed to go out and chat with her.

His vacation came to an end, and he experienced a pang at leaving his Madonna, whom he had been used to bringing so near to him by means of his glass. On the morning of his departure he was obliged to rise early. Going out on to the porch, he sniffed the delicious spring air. The sun was just rising. He walked about, presently going under a tree with overhanging branches. A door opened in the next house, and Anna and another girl came out and walked directly toward him. They advanced to the hedge that separated the two places and were screened from him by its twigs and leaves.

Stealing out of his retreat, stooping that he might not be seen, he went treading on the soft grass to the hedge. On reaching it he heard coming from a few yards distant on the other side their soft voices. Anna's companion was speaking.

"This is the bachelor," she said, tying a thread on a spear of grass. "And this is the unknown," tying another. "And this," tying a third, "is my dear love."

"And who is your dear love?" asked Anna, who was herself tying threads on blades of grass.

"John Ten Eyck. Who is yours?"

"I can't tell you; it is so foolish of me."

"You needn't. I know already. It is the handsome student in the DeRoade place."

Anna made no reply, but Helleger, having found an opening just big enough to give him a view of her face, saw a blush overspread her features.

He was astonished. A girl whom he had not suspected of having been aware of his existence had indicated with the green thread that she had taken him into her innocent heart.

Having tied the blades of grass and cut them to a uniform length the two girls went back to the house and the student departed for the university.

At Amsterdam several years later Helleger and his Madonna met. Her people had received a small legacy and had come to Amsterdam to claim it. Helleger DeRoade did not betray the fact that he had seen Anna before; certainly did not mention that he had looked at her through a fieldglass. Nevertheless he yielded to an irresistible impulse to make her his wife.

In Holland if a young man wishes to ask the hand of a girl in marriage he buys a sweet cake, takes it to her house and in presence of her family places it on a table before her. The family affect not to notice the gift, while the girl, if she accepts him, eats the cake. If she refuses him she leaves the cake on the table.

DeRoade took a cake and laid it before Anna. A blush came to her cheek, and she put out her hand toward it, but did not take it. Was she yielding to a natural coquetry or had she some reason for hesitating? Helleger said to her:

"Am I not he of the green thread?"

The blush on her cheek deepened to scarlet; she had her face in her hands. At last she said:

"Tell me how you learned about the green thread?"

"I will if you will tell me about how you came to know anything about me."

"You must first tell me how you knew about me," she replied.

He shrunk from telling her that he had been looking at her through a spy-glass. He took up the cake and handed it to her.

She ate it.
