 Mrs. Benj. M. Collins, assisted by Misses Nellie and Isabelle Collins, entertained the Five Hundred Club Tuesday evening. The rooms were tastefully decorated with Oregon grape leaves and laurel berries giving a holly effect. Fruit refreshments were served. Those present were: Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Miller; Mrs. M. M. Taylor; Mr. and Mrs. Harry Lay; Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Collins; Messrs Clyde Shaw and E. W. Wilson. Next meeting of the club will be held at the residence of M. M. Taylor, Friday evening of next week.
 A grand treat at the U. S. Hall Saturday evening, Dec. 31st, 1910. A fine change of motion pictures have been secured for the opening of the new year. In addition to this the J. A. C. Orchestra will furnish an evening entertainment of popular music. This orchestra consists purely of local talent, and saying the least their music is well worth the price of admission. The management takes this opportunity to thank the Jacksonville public for their constant and liberal patronage by wishing you one and all a happy and prosperous New Year.

Lecture at Presbyterian Church.
 There will be a lecture, free to all, given in the Presbyterian Church on Tuesday evening commencing at 8 o'clock. The theme of the lecture is a thrilling one and must surely influence wherever it may be heard viz: The life and conversion of Jerry McAuley—the once notorious river pirate of New York City. The speaker Mr. J. L. McComb is connected as a member and, as an Evangelistic official worker of Dr. Matthew's Presbyterian Church of Seattle, a church of over 4,000 members, being one of the largest if not the largest in membership on this coast. Mr. McComb is one of the most successful rescue mission workers which this country affords. Come and hear him—Don't miss it. He will be accompanied in his lecture service by the Rev. R. M. Robinson, the singing Evangelist, whose musical talent is very highly spoken of. He will render several very impressive solos during the evening. Admission free.

 "Come day after tomorrow. Tomorrow is a feast day. You are always having feast days when work begins. All summer long you loaf about, but the minute you start to work you must find excuses to lay off. Clear out, both of you!"
 "Work at last," said Dietrich as he and Gretchen started for the city.
 Arm in arm they went on. Sometimes Gretchen sang. Often he put her hand to his lips. By and by they came abreast of an old gypsy. He wore a coat of Joseph's, and his face was as lined as a frost bitten apple.
 "Will you tell me how to find the Adlergasse?" he asked in broken German. His accent was that of a Magyar.
 They carelessly gave him specific directions and passed on. He followed grimly, like fate, whose agent he was, though long delayed. When he reached the Adlergasse he looked for a sign. He came to a stop in front of the dingy shop of the clock mender. He went inside, and the ancient clock mender looked up from his work, for he was always working. He rose wearily.
 The gypsy smiled mysteriously and laid a hand on his heart.
 "Who are you?" sharply demanded the clock mender.
 "Who I am does not matter. I am he whom you seek."
 "God in heaven!" The bony hands of the clock mender clutched the other's coat.
 The gypsy released himself slowly. "But first show me your pretty crowns and the paper which will give me immunity from the police. Your crowns, as you offered, and immunity: then I speak."

 "Man, I can give you the crowns, but God knows I have no longer the power to give you immunity."
 The gypsy shouldered his bundle. "For God's sake, wait!" begged the clock mender.
 But the gypsy walked out, unheeding.

 Two days later, in the afternoon. "Grumbach," said Carmichael, "what were you looking at the other night with those opera glasses at the ball?"
 "I was looking into the past."
 "Oh, psaw! You were following her highness with them. I want to know why."
 "She is beautiful."
 "You made a promise to me not long ago."
 "I did?" noncommittally.
 "Yes. Soon I shall be shaking the dust of Drelberg, and I want to know beforehand what this Chinese puzzle is. What did you do that compelled your flight from Ehrenstein?"
 Grumbach's pipe hung pendulous in his hand. He swung it to and fro absently.
 "I am waiting. Remember, you are an American citizen for all that you were born here. If anything should happen to you I must know the whole story in order to help you. You know that you may trust me."
 "It isn't that, captain. I have grown to like you in these few days. Those opera glasses—it was an idea. Well, since you will know, I was a gardener's boy. I worked under my brother Hermann. I used to ask the nurse, who had charge of her serene highness, where she would go each day. Then I'd cut flowers and meet them on the road somewhere and give the bouquet to the child. There was never any escort—a footman and a driver. The little one was always greatly pleased, and she would call me Hans. I was in love those days." Grumbach laughed with bitterness. "Yes, even I. Her name was Tekla, and she was a jade. I wanted to run away, but I had no money. I had already secured a passport—no matter how. It was the first affair, and I was desperately hurt. One day a gypsy came to me. I shall always know him by the yellow spot in one of his black eyes. I was given a thousand crowns to tell him which road her highness was to be driven over the next day. As I said, I was mad with love. Why a gypsy should want to know where her highness was going to ride was of no consequence to me. I told him. I was to get the money the same night. It was thus that her highness was stolen. It was thus that I became accessory before the fact, as the lawyers say. Flight with a band of Magyar gypsies; weary days in the mountains, with detachments of troops scouring the whole duchy. Finally I escaped. A fortune was offered for the immediate return of the child. At the time I believed that it was an abduction for ransom. But no one ever came forward for the reward. There was a price on my head when it was known that I had fled."
 "And no one ever came for the reward? That is strange. Was immunity promised?" Carmichael asked.
 "It was inferred, but not literally promised."
 "Fear kept them away."
 "Perhaps. And there is Arnsberg."
 "Was he guilty?"
 "I never saw his hand anywhere."
 "So this is the story! Well, when a man's in love he is more or less in the clutch of temporary insanity. I've a wild streak in me also. But what I can't understand is why you return and put your head in the lion's mouth. The police will stumble on something. If you are arrested I could do little for you. The United States protects only harmless political outcasts. Yours is a crime such as nullifies your citizenship, and any government would be compelled to send you back here if the demand was made for your extradition."
 "I know all that."
 "I suppose that when conscience drives me must go on. But the princess has been found. The best thing you can do is to put your passports into immediate use and return to the States. You can do no good here."
 "Maybe," Grumbach replied, his pipe, lighted it and without saying more went out and down into the street.
 Carmichael watched him through the window.
 "He's a queer codger, and it's a queer story. I don't believe I have heard it all either. What was he really hunting for with those glasses? I give it up."
 He was not angry with Grumbach. Rather he seemed to be drawn to him more closely than ever. Mad with love—that was the phrase. He couldn't over and over—mad with love. That excused many things.
 Grumbach was indeed perturbed, and this sensation was the result of what he had not told his friend, Gott! And after a time he was in the Adlergasse. And of all that happy, noisy family only he and Hermann left! In one of the open doorways, for it was warm, a final career of vanishing summer, he saw a fat, youngish woman knitting woolen hose. Two or three children sprawled about her knees. There was the petulance of his and forehead which marked the satisfaction of the contented married.

Ballard's SNOW LINIMENT
 Is the surest Remedy for All Abrasions of the Flesh.

If the wound is cleansed and the liniment applied promptly, the healing process begins at once and the wound heals from the inside outwardly, thus performing a perfect cure that leaves no scar. If the wound heals on the outside too quickly, pus forms under the surface and breaks out into a running sore that is hard to cure and inevitably leaves a bad scar.

Owners of blooded stock prefer this liniment to all others for that reason, and they use it not only on fine animals, but on human flesh, as it does its work quickly and thoroughly.

Price 25c, 50c and $1.00.
