

JACKSONVILLE POST

Official Paper of the City of Jacksonville, Oregon

A weekly newspaper published every Saturday at the county seat of Jackson County, Oregon. D. W. BAGSHAW, Editor.

Entered as second-class matter June 22, 1907, at the post office at Jacksonville, Oregon, under Act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

SATURDAY, JULY 29, 1911

SUBSCRIPTION: One year by mail $1.50. Advertising rates furnished on application.

Did you ever notice that in advocating a doubtful cause the advocate usually endeavors to bolster up his side of the question with alleged interviews and quotations from the utterances of others instead of showing the justice of their cause? Mess. Piper and Jackson of the Oregonian and Journal, are (like newspaper men in general) qualified to speak upon all matters within their ken, but how can any man of common business sense claim that the issuance of $1,000,000. additional county warrants will raise the market value of warrants now selling at a discount. Warrants are payable in the order of their presentation, and the warrants now outstanding, if protested, would have to be paid before any of the new issue. The whole scheme seems to be a plan to flood the county with paper which could be purchased by the money lenders a large discount and later taken up by the county at its face value in exchange for bonds. Better wait a few weeks, or months if necessary until a bond issue can be authorized and save thousands of dollars for the county. The saving in interest alone would be $20,000. per year.

The dull season in merchantile lines is the proper time to increase the advertising space used. When trade is brisk customers are plenty but in certain seasons it is necessary to remind the public of the bargains you can offer them. Shrewd business men in the large towns are aware of this fact and stimulate trade by calling attention to special offerings, etc. with the result that they practically have no "dull season." Try it, you will find it worth while.

The action of the city council in arranging for the sprinkling of the streets will meet with the approval of most business men and residents of the district sprinkled. It is too bad that the service could not be extended to include the entire city.

GOVERNMENT BUILDING

To Cost $100,000. Proposed for Ashland.

A dispatch from Washington says: "Representative Hawley has introduced three bills appropriating $100,000 each for the purchase of sites and the erection of postoffice buildings at Oregon City, Corvallis and Ashland."

This announcement revives the hopes that Ashland will have a postoffice more in keeping with the size and needs of the city than the present one. The need of such a structure has been apparent for some time and is bound to become more urgent with the continued growth of the city. The fate of Hawley's bill will be watched here with interest and it is probable that steps will be taken to impress upon Oregon's representatives at the national capital the need of getting action on the bill.

Appropriating Water

"Any person, association or corporation hereafter intending to acquire the right to the beneficial use of any waters shall, before commencing the construction, enlargement or extension of any ditch, canal or other distribution or controlling works, or performing any work in connection with such construction, or proposed appropriation, make application to the State Engineer for a permit to make such appropriation. Any person who shall willfully divert or use water to the detriment of others without compliance with law shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor. The possession or use of water, except when a right of use is acquired in accordance with law, shall be prima facie evidence of the guilt of the person using it." Sec. 45, Laws of 1909.

"It shall be a misdemeanor to use, store, or divert any water until after the issuance of permit to appropriate such waters." Sec. 66, Laws of 1909.

APPLICATIONS
Applications should be made upon the forms prescribed by the State Engineer.

An application is not a permit to appropriate water until after its approval by the State Engineer.

Three different application forms are provided, one for original or new diversions, another for the enlargements or extensions of existing works, and a third for the construction of reservoir and storage of unappropriated waters. These can be secured without charge by addressing the State Engineer, Salem, Oregon.

A permit to construct a reservoir and store surplus water does not grant the right to divert and use such water. Separate applications should, therefore, be made for each of these purposes.

Application for a permit to divert stored water when released in a natural stream, is known as a secondary permit. It need not be made at the time of application for a reservoir permit. Such application when made should refer to such reservoir for a supply of water and be accompanied by documentary evidence that an agreement has been entered into with the owner of the reservoir for a permanent and sufficient interest in said reservoir to impound enough water for the purposes set forth in the application.

Modern Equipment

In these days of modern railroad equipment, where the traveler is protected at almost every turn of the track by some new device, it is apparent that the transportation companies of the country have come to recognize the truthfulness of the maxim that it is better to avoid losses than to incur the expensive luxury of law suits. These may not mean any eventual loss in the way of damages, but they do mean publicity, in which the traveling public takes an abiding interest.

One of the best testimonials of the efficient equipment of the Southern Pacific Company is found in the report of an accident that occurred on the night of June 24, 1911, in the vicinity of Sparks, Nevada. The affair was one of these events which cannot be safeguarded against when a broken rail snapped with the impact of the train as it passed over the weak spot. Just think! Nine coaches left the track and not a single soul was injured. Such an accident three years ago would have meant a catastrophe of sufficient magnitude to arouse the entire world with another recital of horrors.

The accident at Sparks is one that has not been duplicated in the United States, and the freedom from facilities is due to the excessive care exercised by the operating and all other departments which have to do with the handling of passenger business. This vigilance explains the immunity of the Southern Pacific and its allied lines from serious accidents. Steel trains coupled up on the vestibule plan form aerolites that penetrate space without regard to obstacles. In addition, when these meteors of the railroad world are further secured by the block signal system and countless other checks against the forgetfulness of human nature, the traveler may rely upon that particular system as the one best bet of his life.

Current Comment.

Senator Newlands of Nevada has introduced a bill establishing an "Inter-State Trade Commission" to have the same power over industrial corporations as the Inter-State Commerce Commission now exercises over the railroads. This is evidently Senator Newlands' idea of a solution of the trust problem. He may not know it and probably does not so intend, but his project amounts practically to a method of giving tie trusts a longer lease of life. There is only one way to get rid of any evil and that is to remove its cause. If the cause remains untouched, the evil will remain, no matter what else may be done to abolish it. That is the trouble with attempts that have been made to do away with trusts through the anti-trust law, and that is the trouble with Senator Newlands' proposition. --Ex.
