:-: JACKSONVILLE POST :-:

Official Paper of the City of Jacksonville, Oregon

A weekly newspaper published every Saturday at the county seat of Jackson County, Oregon. D. W. BAGSHAW, Editor.

Entered as second-class matter June 22, 1907, at the post office at Jacksonville, Oregon, under Act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 23, 1911

SUBSCRIPTION: One year by mail $1.50. Advertising rates furnished on application.

Next Saturday the question of issuing bonds for the construction of permanent roads in Jackson county will be submitted to a vote of the people, and to an impartial mind there seems no good reason why the bonds should not carry. It is certain that the building of the roads will put into circulation a large sum of money which will pass through many different hands in the payment for labor, supplies, etc. That the roads will be a benefit to the farmer who has the products of his farm to deliver to market no one denies, but the point is raised that the laborer will benefit at the expense of the property owner who pays the taxes and in the end pays off the bonds. In this case as in all others the laborer is worthy of his hire and as the good roads will benefit the property owner more than any other citizen, by way of increasing the value of his property, it is just that he should contribute the necessary funds.

Business Side of Farming.

Corvallis, Ore., Sept. 21-Dean J. A. Bexell of the commerce department of the Oregon Agricultural College has just issued a second edition of his book "The Business Side of Farming", in response to the increasing demand for a more businesslike management of farm properties. The cost of production of crops, household accounts, special records and the application of single and double entry bookkeeping to the needs of the farmers are all discussed, with numerous illustrations to make the text clearer. The frontispiece is a cut showing an ideal desk for a farmer containing a small fire-proof safe to contain his valuable records, such as pedigree certificates of blooded stock, insurance papers and similar things.

Birds and Fishes and Glass.

A correspondent recently reported what he described as the "curious freak" of a blackbird flying against a parlor window many times at the same spot continuously. Such an incident is not uncommon. Birds have been known to fight for hours at a time, day after day, with their own image reflected in a pane of glass, pecking and fluttering against the pane and quite exhausting themselves in their fury to demolish the supposed rival. It is another instance of how the arts of our civilization corrupt and confuse the birds. It is the same with fishes. Darwin tells a story of a pike in an aquarium separated by plate glass from fish which were its proper food. In trying to get at the fish the pike would often dash with such violence against the glass as to be completely stunned. It did this for more than three months before it learned caution. Then when the glass was removed the pike would not attack those particular fish, but would devour others freshly introduced. It did not at all understand the situation, but associated the punishment it had received not with the glass, but with a particular kind of fish.

Boiled Down.

When Samuel G. Blythe, the writer, was editing a newspaper in New York state a green reporter one night turned in a long and thrilling story regarding the rough treatment handed out to John Smith, a visitor to the town. The story related that Mr. Smith, wearing a high silk hat, had ventured down to the docks after nightfall and a silk hat being unusual and provocative of antagonisms in that section Mr. Smith had emerged from among the dock hands without the hat. Nevertheless he carried out of the melee so many wounds, cuts and bruises that he had to be sent to the hospital. The article in its original form was too long and not in keeping with the style of the paper. Accordingly Blythe started to rewrite it. This is the form in which it appeared in the paper the next morning: "John Smith, wearing a high silk hat, went down to the docks last night—Emergency hospital."—Popular Magazine.

Wagner's Last Words.

There have been so many and conflicting stories published as to the last hours of Richard Wagner that the chapter devoted to this point in Glafennapp's biography of the composer will be read with interest. The master was not really sick at the time, but tired out from the work and worry over the "Parsifal" rehearsals. On the morning of Feb. 13 he said to his valet, "I must be careful today." After breakfast he went to his study as usual and worked on an essay on "The Feminine in the Human." He asked to be excused at the noon meal, and the family and an intimate friend were enjoying it when a woman servant rushed in and said that the great man was ill. He was placed on a cot in his study, and while removing some of his clothes a watch which his wife had given to him fell to the floor. He gasped, "My watch!" And these were the last words he uttered.

A Race of Tenors.

Generally speaking, races living at high altitudes have weaker and more highly pitched voices than those living in regions where the supply of oxygen is more plentiful. Thus, in South America, among the Indians living on the plateaus between the ranges of the Andes, at an elevation of from 10,000 to 14,000 feet, the men have voices like women and the women like children, their singing being a shrill monotone. The Australian native has a weak voice, but a knack of sending it a long distance, and the lowest tribes of African bushmen would come into the same category; but, it is said, of all human beings the pygmies of Central Africa have, in point of volume and compass, the weakest of human voices. —Harper's Weekly.

Wellington an Simplicity.

When Sir Edwin Landseer was painting the duke's portrait, hoping to save him the trouble of much sitting, he wrote and asked if he could let him have the trousers belonging to the uniform. The duke wrote back in all solemnity: "Field Marshal the Duke of Wellington presents his compliments to Sir Edwin Landseer and regrets that he cannot send him the trousers as he has but one pair."—London Nation.

Wanted an Even Start.

"Pa, you know you told me to count twenty before I punched another boy?" "Yes." "Well, in order to make it work out right you have got to go around the neighborhood and make the other boys promise to count twenty before they take a punch at me."—Houston Post.

The Largest Restaurant.

In the Berlin zoological garden restaurant, the largest in the world, 10,000 persons can sit down simultaneously beneath the same roof. Open air terraces for use in summer will accommodate another 10,000 diners. There are 1,000 waiters, and the kitchen staff exceeds 500.

Private Coleridge.
In his young days the poet Coleridge had a little love affair which ended in disaster, for the lady refused him. In despair he enlisted in a cavalry regiment which he hoped would be ordered on foreign service. For family reasons he dropped his correct name, but from a feeling of sentiment retained the initials, so Samuel Taylor Coleridge became Private Silas Tompkins Camberbatch. The regiment did not leave the country, and it was not long before his soul wearied of barrack life and its utter absence of romance. His military life ended in a curious fashion. One day while Coleridge was doing a weary sentry two officers strolled past. One of them made use of a Greek quotation which the other corrected. The first insisted on his correctness, while the other was just as positive he was wrong. While they disputed the sentry suddenly presented arms and respectfully informed them that they were both in error. He gave the exact quotation, name of the author and other circumstances. This incident led to an inquiry, and the poet was restored to the bosom of his family.—London Graphic.

In a Japanese Temple.

"Asakuso temple is dedicated to the goddess Kwannon, a tiny image of gold, about two and one-half inches high," writes a traveler in Japan. "At the entrance to the temple grounds on either side of the immense gate stand two large and fearful looking figures, guarding the sacred precincts. Hanging outside the wire grating are a number of sandals for their use if they wish to take a walk, and rice is sprinkled about. Each worshiper, before entering the temple, calls at a small building, and after contributing a small amount, washes his hands and rinses his mouth. In front of the main shrine is a large aperture in the floor, covered with lattice-work, into which the worshiper casts his gift. After clapping his hands to awaken or attract the attention of the god, he kneels, but his prayer is only brief. While there is one chief shrine there are many others under the same roof. One shrine especially attracted my attention; it was made of wood, and quite disfigured and worn through the constant rubbing of hands on the spot corresponding to the afflicted portions of the sufferers' bodies."—Chicago News.
