:-: JACKSONVILLE POST :-:
Official Paper of the City of Jacksonville, Oregon

A weekly newspaper published every Saturday at the county seat of Jackson County, Oregon. D. W. BAGSHAW, Editor.

Entered as second-class matter June 22, 1907, at the post office at Jacksonville, Oregon, under Act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 10, 1912

SUBSCRIPTION: One year by mail $1.50. Advertising rates furnished on application.

The county commissioners board is shy one member, caused by the resignation of Mr. Davis which was tendered Thursday. The Medford papers state the resignation was made on account of the pressure of private business interests and that as a consequence Medford is without representation at the County Court. Whether the resignation of Mr. Davis has any political significance may develop later.

The council on Thursday night passed an ordinance submitting to the voters a proposed amendment to the city charter in regard to the granting of franchises. As the granting of franchises is one of the most important powers vested in the municipal council of a city, it is best that changes in procedure be made carefully. Next week we will publish the part of charter sought to be changed, as it now stands and also as it would be if changed by the proposed amendment.

When you have a bad cold you want the best medicine obtainable so as to cure it with as little delay as possible. Here is a druggist's opinion: "I have sold Chamberlain's Cough Remedy for fifteen years," says Enos Lollar of Saratoga, Ind., "and consider it the best on the market." Sold by all dealers.

Right taxation would largely correct excessive land valuations.

Is there going to be any town-plot farming or gardening this year?

The president does progress some he recommends a government trunk railroad in Alaska.

George W. Perkins says some true things. He says dissolution (of the trusts) is delusion.

An Indiana man has been sent to jail for spanking his 16-year old wife. He should have let her mother do it.

SUTHERLAND'S EAGLE EYE SALVE
Good for Nothing but the Eyes

BULLETS IN BATTLE.

Death Wounds and Flesh Wounds and the Feeling When Struck.

In "Serving the Republic" General Nelson A. Miles says that, like every other soldier who has seen much active service, he is often asked how it feels to be wounded. He himself was wounded four times and twice almost fatally, so he is able to speak from experience. He says:

"One is often asked how it seems to be wounded in battle. The flight of a bullet is quicker than thought and has passed through a flesh wound before one realizes that he has been struck. I have seen bodies of men dead on the field of battle where the brain had been pierced and death had been instantaneous. They would remain in every position of the 'manual of arms,' with an anxious look, a frown or a smile on their cold and rigid faces.

"My wounds received at Fair Oaks, Fredericksburg and Petersburg were flesh wounds and disabled me but a short time. While riding down the line at Chancellorsville one of the enemy's bullets struck my metallic belt plate with great force. This caused a slight deviation as it entered the body. The result was an instant deathly sickening sensation. My sword dropped from my right hand; my scabbard and belt dropped to the left. I was completely paralyzed below the waist. My horse seemed to realize what had occurred. He stopped, turned and walked slowly back, I holding to the pommel of the saddle with my hands. We soon reached a group of soldiers, who took me off and, placing me in a blanket, carried me to the Chancellorsville House and pulled a dead man off a couch to make room for me."

TOOK HIS TIME.

Bill Gave the Old Man a Long Wait For the Backlog.

Skipper Norwood was born in a little Nova Scotia town. During the long winter evenings young Bill used to lie out in front of the big open fireplace, and just about the time he had got warm and comfortable and a trifle drowsy Norwood senior would make up his mind the fire was getting low and send his son out into the snow to bring in a backlog from the wood pile. Eventually these nocturnal pilgrimages got on young Bill's nerves, and one night when his father sent him out after the backlog the son continued on past the wood pile and across country to the nearest seaport, where he shipped on a whaler.

Nine years later Bill came back. It was a bitter winter night, and the snow was falling. Bill sneaked up to the window and looked into the old sitting room. The fire was burning in the old fireplace, and Bill's father and mother were seated in front of it. He noticed that the fire was a trifle low. So he went to the wood pile, selected a big backlog, carried it into the house and stood for a moment by the fire with the log on his shoulder.

"Father," said Bill, "I've brought in that backlog you sent me after."

"The old man never budged an inch. Instead he spat into the fire and retorted testily:

"Set it on the fire. You've been a long while gittin' it!"—Saturday Evening Post.

The Drug Clerk's Caller.

"A man came in yesterday and wanted something we didn't have. He had been looking into the window, and he must have thought this was a book store just because we were advertising some novels and stationery and dictionaries and a lot of that left over junk. Well, anyhow, he came to me and he says, says he, 'I want Lincoln's Gettysburg address.'"

"Look for it yourself, str," says I politely, like we're taught to do. "There's a directory over there in the corner. But I don't think you'll find it. These directories only have the subscribers' city addresses."

"Well, say, that fellow was so mad he wouldn't wait. Called me ignorant and all kinds of things. But that just shows you what us drug clerks have got to put up with."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Had it All Over Again.

"The other night I went to an amateur theatrical performance, and then I went home and had a terrible dream. "What did you dream?" "I dreamed that I went to it again."

Two Views of It.
"What do you think of married life?" asked the henpecked man, addressing the youthful bridegroom. "Bliss is no name for it," said the young husband enthusiastically. "You are right," said the henpecked one gloomily. "Bliss is no name for it."

Conscience.
It is astonishing how soon the whole conscience begins to unravel if a single stretch drops. One little sin indulged in makes a hole you could put your head through.—Charles Buxton.
