

Worked an Old Trick.
One of the solons under the gift dome of the Massachusetts statehouse swears this happened to him. Have you heard it—back in the rattle days?
"Six of us went down on the cape duck shooting soon after the season opened. I was not much of a shooter, so the gang thought they would put one over on me and assigned me to a blind where no ducks ever were known to go and went away and left me there. From an hour before sunrise until late afternoon I stuck to the job, but nary a quack.
"That night at the table I absent-mindedly cut open a shell and was surprised at the number of small shot it contained. After more or less airing of opinions on projectiles from each 'expert' a pool was made up on the number. Fifty bucks—ten a head—is not a bad day's work. I think. Eh? How? What do you suppose I was doing for twelve hours in that blind?"
And yet wonder at some of the bills that get by the sacred codfish.—Boston Traveler.

Not Their Fault.
An American woman who resided for some years in Mexico had an odd experience with an earthquake. She was the mother of two lively small sons. One day they had been especially obstreperous and did not grow quieter as the time for her sleigh and theirs approached. After rousing her from her nap two or three times by their antics she gave them fair warning that if there was any further commotion severe punishment would result. Again she dropped off into sleep. Suddenly she found herself awake and on her feet with sounds of banging still in her ears and the room quivering as if from the fall of a heavy piece of furniture. The boys, scared and guilty looking, were in the doorway. She seized the nearer, reversed him and had him half spanked before the excited protest of his brother penetrated to her brain through his anguished howls. Then she became aware that she was spanking him for an earthquake.—New York Herald.

Written on Glass.
Miss Harriet Auber's beautiful lines, "Our Blessed Redeemer, Ere He Breathed," were written by the authoress on a windowpane in her house at Huddesdon. A dealer in curios tried to purchase this interesting and peculiar manuscript from the owner of the house after the death of Miss Auber in 1862, but he was unsuccessful. The pane of glass was subsequently stolen, and it has never since been found or its fate discovered.
Centuries ago Theophilus, bishop of Orleans, while in prison at Metz composed the hymn, "All Glory, Laud and Honor," which he wrote on the window of his cell. As the usual Palm Sunday procession passed through the town the emperor heard sounds of singing proceeding from the prison. He thereupon liberated the bishop, whose hymn was afterward regularly used on each succeeding Palm Sunday as a processional, the choir taking up each quatrain and the public joining in singing the chorus.

High Bridge, in New York, was completed in 1842 and at that time was considered one of the world's marvels of bridge building. It may be added that it still is looked upon by bridge builders as a model of its kind. This great stone bridge was built to bring water into the city from the Croton river valley after the great dam was thrown across it forty miles above Manhattan. The aqueduct, cut part way through solid rock and part way continued by tunnel, had to be brought across the Harlem, and the solution of this engineering problem was in High bridge.

His Rule in Danger.
The tough looking citizen who had been sentenced to six months' imprisonment at hard labor for beating up his wife appealed to the court with tears in his voice.
"Have a little pity, judge," he whimpered. "I speak to you as man to man. If you send me up for a thing like that I'll never be able to maintain discipline in my family again."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

A Way the Dutch Have.
The Dutch have a delightfully original way of collecting their taxes. If after the notice has been given the money is not sent the authorities place one or two hungry militiamen in the house, to be lodged and maintained at the expense of the defaulter until the amount of the tax is paid.

Taking Care of the Heart.
A physician writes: "Life would be prolonged by a little more attention to the heart, by paying a little respect to the most faithful servant we ever have. Much good might be done also if parents would teach their children the danger of overtaxing the heart. They should teach them to stop and rest a few moments during their play when they begin to feel the violent throbbing of their hearts against the chest wall."
