SCOTT BONDING PLAN AGAIN

We have received from Wm. J. Scott, a copy of his bill for the establishment of the proposed Taxpayers National Bank of Jackson County, Oregon. The bill is entitled: "A Bill for an act to provide funds to build good roads and to make other public improvements in Jackson County, Oregon under what is known as the Scott plan to save Jackson County, Oregon, ninety thousand dollars a year in interest."

The entire plan is chimerical and the bill itself upon its face shows a most lamentable ignorance of the first principles of the laws governing the establishment and operation of National Banks—laws made by the United States for the whole country and not to be altered by the voters of Jackson or any other county.

If Mr. Scott would give the laws of our nation a little study, say devote one-tenth part of the time used in kicking against present systems, he would soon see the inconsistency and impracticability of his plan and would then hesitate before springing a matter which he does not understand upon a suffering public. The only effect of the proposed plan will be to make its author appear as a visionary with more imagination than judgment.

Under our initiative system any voter with a plausible manner can encumber the ballot with a lot of ridiculous measures, visionary and impractical. Time the healer of many ills may cure this—the people in time will learn to think and study well the different phases of a measure and will hesitate to submit those the only effect of which would be to make the author ridiculous.

When a Deacon Broke Loose

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1912, by Associated Literary Press.

There were only 600 inhabitants in the village of Glendale when the first meeting house, as they still call it in the country, was erected. Methodists, Baptists, Presbyterians and Adventists went in together in the building and used it alternately. As the village grew the different denominations built churches for themselves, and finally the old church was left to one. This happened to be the poorest one financially, and it wasn't in human nature to look around on the newer edifices and not feel a bit envious.

As a matter of fact, the old meeting house was little better than a barracks. "I reckon any one can praise the Lord from the midst of a brush heap in the woods, but I also reckon that, no can do it with a lecture more steam in a comfortable meeting house," said Deacon Pegram.

The deacon was the financial man of the church, but it was years and years before he saw his way clear for the erection of a new edifice. Several freight cars loaded with cement got smashed up in the suburbs of the town, and the deacon was told to help himself.

He got wagon loads of the stuff, for that new meeting house was to be a concrete one. The concrete industry was then in its infancy, but Deacon Pegram had found a man to put the matter through and guarantee a satisfactory job.

Uriah struck town, and things were changed. He knew all about the cement business and was ready to take off his coat and carry the job through if any family would board him gratis in return. Deacon Pegram jumped at the chance. Uriah was told to eat all he could and go to the head of the class and manage things. He took hold as if he had dabbled in cement all his life. Uriah hustled. He made everybody else hustle. If any one lagged he was right on the spot to say:

"Now, then, don't do no loafing on the Lord. This is his job, and he expects things to move lively."

We all know now, though few knew at that time, that there are several grades of cement and that cement workers do not shovel sand and cement together in a haphazard way. There must be due proportions, according to the work to be done. Uriah simply went ahead and shoveled. Providence stood back of him with dry weather until the walls were ready for the roof, and then she got tired of a good thing. There were those who said the bricks were too soft and others who thought they could see bulges in the walls and still others who predicted that two hours' rain would spoil everything, but to all such Deacon Pegram said:

"Didn't the floods rage and the lumber come down?"

"Yes."

"Didn't we discover the sand pit in the nick of time?"

"Yes."

"Didn't Brother Higgs see the error of his ways just when we were wondering what we should do for the bricks?"

"He did."

"And didn't Providence ordain that those freight cars should be smashed up and the cement scattered over an acre of ground?"

"It looks like it."

"And then came Uriah Kingston. At the crossroads he might have turned to the left and gone to Liverpool, but Providence guided him to the right and to us."

"But it may rain, and if it does"—

"It will not rain for a month to come. Providence won't permit it to."

The deacon talked that way and believed what he talked, and Uriah talked and believed still stronger. And then the rain descended. It set in at dark one day and came down in a way to soak things. Just at daylight next morning, with the rain still coming down, the men crept forth to see how it fared with the enterprise. There were no walls left. In place of them was a small lake of mud. Every last block of concrete had melted in the rain. The deacon and Uriah stood and gazed for five long minutes like men stupefied.

And then Deacon Pegram broke loose. It was years ago, but they still date things from that day. He whooped. He threw down his hat and jumped on it. He knocked Uriah down and jumped on him. As people came out to see what the trouble was he threw them into the lake of mud and kicked his dog and cuffed his wife's ears, and then he ran amuck through the streets and tore gates off their hinges and uprooted sidewalks. Men ran and women dodged, and it took two lightning rods men and a chicken buyer to the him up. He continued to whoop until his voice gave out, and for three days he was expected to die. These three days allowed Uriah Kingston to get sixty miles away and the lake of mud to crust over. The deacon's pastor called when things had quieted down, and, laying his hand on the patient's head, he softly said:

"Brother Pegram, I trust you haven't lost your faith in Providence."

"Oh, no," was the reply. "I am sure that Providence has planned for us to use the old meeting house until the roof falls in and then to rent a barn somewhere."

In time the roof did cave in, but no barn was rented. The congregation went over to the Baptists.
