

The American Girl

Why Her British Sister Can't Compete With Her

By F. A. MITCHEL

Two gentlemen were sitting together in the Carleton club in London smoking and sipping the beverage before them, the topic of conversation falling upon the American women who were then beginning to capture actions of nobility in England.

"How do they do it?" asked one, a burly man with mutton chop whiskers.

"They've got so much in 'em," replied the other, a tall man with a drooping blond mustache.

"Have you ever had any experience with them?" asked the burly man.

"Experience? Well, I should think so," said the other with a smile that indicated he could tell a story if he would. Then, setting down the glass he was sipping from, he turned to his friend and added, "It's all past and gone now, and I can't see how any harm can come from my telling you about it."

"About what?"

"That's what I'm going to give you, but I mustn't begin at the wrong end, you know. It happened when I first went into the diplomatic corps and was attached to the Paris legation as secretary. At that time the eyes of the powers were concentrated on Egypt and the Suez canal. Our government wanted to get its hands on it in order that it might maintain a supremacy in Egypt as well as in maritime affairs, both merchant and navy. But it wasn't a case of grabbing things as we'd been used to doing—that is, signifying a wish to open trade with a people, then getting them in debt to us, then send in a few war vessels to collect the debt, then assume a protectorate to see that the thing didn't occur again. Oh, no! It wasn't any such simple case as that.

"Well, the premier and all the cabinet here were thinking and scheming as to what kind of a trick could be played to get control of the canal and yet keep within the law of nations. One morning my chief, the ambassador, sent for me in hot haste, and when I appeared he looked all the doors, closed all the windows and whispered in my ear:

"There's a large block of stock of the Suez canal offered for sale. The German embassy has got hold of the fact, and Count von Sterlitz, one of the best men, will start for Berlin on the 6 o'clock train to inform his government of the fact in order that it may buy this controlling interest. I am going to rely upon you to delay him while I send a man across the channel to represent the matter to the premier in London, that he may make the purchase for England. Now, gather your wits and go to work. I know you have a genius for such matters and won't fail me."

"This last was taffy, you know, and the ambassador only said it to spur me on."

"Have you been informed how Von Sterlitz will travel?" I asked.

"I have. My informant got it from his valet. The count has told the valet to have a grip with toilet articles ready for him at 5 o'clock and to call a cab off the street at 5:30."

"Very well; I will do the best I can in the matter, but you have given me a very delicate job to perform. Let us hope for the best."

"It was then 11 o'clock in the morning, and I had made an engagement to lunch with Miss Alice Stringfellow, an American to whom I had been paying some attention, which I flattered myself had not been disagreeable to her. I left the embassy intending to send her word that I was unable to keep my appointment when it occurred to me in my perplexity that a woman in a matter of duplicity is worth a dozen men, and, calling for a cab, I drove straight to her house.

"I had nothing to fear in giving her my confidence, for she was not involved in diplomatic chicanery and the United States was not especially interested in the Suez canal. At any rate, I threw caution to the winds, told her what I had been directed to do and begged her for heaven's sake to give me an idea.

"It is now 11:30," she said, glancing at a clock, "and you have but six hours to form a plan and execute it—that is, if you intend to prevent the count's reaching his train. I think this should be done if possible. If not, some one must go with him, trusting to find an opportunity to delay him on the way or from communicating with his government on his arrival at the capital."

"Good gracious!" I exclaimed. "You have got it in a nutshell!"

"I was so bewildered myself that the rapidity and clearness with which her brain worked astonished me. I sat gazing at her while her fair brows were drawn together with intense thought. Presently she arose and paced the floor, still thinking. It was half an hour before she spoke. I all the while sitting like a dunce waiting for her to solve the problem.

"Suppose," she said, suddenly pausing in her walk and turning to me, "that I can suggest a way of kidnapping the count. Do you know of any place where you can take him and keep him for awhile?"

"This gave me something definite to

The Speed Mania.

Mr. Newcar (about to start on his first trip in his recently purchased motorcar, to his chauffeur—Now, William, I want it thoroughly understood I will not have fast driving. Always keep well under the legal limit, not as close to it as you can. Ten miles an hour is fast enough for me. What I want is comfort, not excitement. Do you understand?

Three days later. "Er—er—William, I must be back to the house by 7 o'clock. This road seems very straight and wide. I think you might go just a little faster without danger?"

Two days later. "William, this dust is very unpleasant. If you could push that car ahead—it seems to be going rather slowly."

Next day. "Put on a little more speed, William. There's no use in being a crank. This road is too good to lose the chance."

A week later. "Open her up, William. There are no police within five miles, I'll bet, and if there are who cares? I'm out for fun. Let her rip. Let her rip. This is no steam roller. Let's have some speed."—Philadelphia Ledger.

Some Butchers' Names.

A butcher who had some spare time made a study of the New York telephone directory for butchers whose names are out of the ordinary or fit the business. Sam Frankfurter has a shop at 219 East Seventh street and A. Weiner is at 1443 avenue A. John Now is on Third avenue and Frank Then on Amsterdam avenue. If they formed a partnership Now & Then would sound familiar. Wing Sang is in the poultry business and A. Fox is a game dealer. Louis Rich is on Third avenue and John Richer is in the Bronx. Emil Half is on Amsterdam avenue. George Idler hustles in a market on Webster avenue. John Grab is taking things easy in his shop on Second avenue. Max Warm is on East Houston street. Max Lent of Norfolk street never keeps it. Joseph Hug of West Fifteenth street should be a favorite with the women. For the finish how about Julius Goodby of avenue A?—Butchers' Advocate.

The Fiddle Drill.

The "fiddle drill" is one of the oldest stonecutting tools in existence. It is said to antedate Greek sculpture and is in use today in about the same form as it was 2,000 years ago. As its name implies, its action resembles a fiddle. The drill is of two pieces. In one hand a carver holds the drill stock, which is like a carpenter's brace, except that it is straight instead of having a crank. In the other hand he holds the "bow," which is strung with a brass wire and which is given a turn around the drill stock. To use the drill the carver places the drill stock against his breast, holding it with his left hand, and with his right he draws the bow back and forth, fiddle fashion. This imparts a rotary motion to the drill stock, and the drill is ground to cut in either way it turns. The fiddle drill is used in the finest work, in crevices where the sculptor could not reach with his chisel and hammer without endangering the carving.

Queer, but Correct.

Professor Bradner Matthews, in his quality of philologist, said one day in New York:

"The past participle, 'gotten,' has gone out in England, though it still lingers on with us. In England, however, 'gotten' is almost as obsolete as 'putten'."

"In some parts of Cumberland the villagers still use 'gotten' and 'putten,' and a pupil teacher once told me of a lesson on these past participles where he gave her pupils an exercise to write on the blackboard.

"In the midst of the exercise an urchin began to laugh. She asked him why he was laughing and he answered:

"Joe's put putten where he should have putten put."

KEEP KIDNEYS WELL

Health is Worth Saving and some

Jacksonville People Know to Save it.

Many Jacksonville people take their lives in their hands by neglecting the kidneys when they know these organs need help. Sick kidneys are responsible for a great amount of suffering and ill health, but there is no need to suffer nor to remain in danger. Use Doan's Kidney Pills—a remedy that has cured thousands of kidney sufferers.

The following statement leaves no ground for doubt.

Mrs. Mary Winterhalter, near W. Jackson St., Medford Ore., says: "I used Doan's Kidney Pills with beneficial results when suffering from kidney trouble, and I know of other persons who have taken them with success. Since I used Doan's Kidney Pills about a year ago, I have not had the least trouble from my kidneys. This remedy deserves my hearty endorsement."
