

JACKSONVILLE POST
Official Paper of the City of Jacksonville, Oregon

A weekly newspaper published every Saturday at the county seat of Jackson County, Oregon. D. W. BAGSHAW, Editor.

Entered as second-class matter June 22, 1907, at the post office at Jacksonville, Oregon, under Act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 23, 1912

SUBSCRIPTION: One year by mail $1.50. Advertising rates furnished on application.

Now that the water system is completed the need of sewers is self-evident. A number of parties in the main part of town want to put water in their buildings but cannot do so until an outlet is provided. A main trunk line on the principal streets would be sufficient for the present—laterals could be added later as needed. We hope to see the matter taken up by the council soon.

Considerable guessing is being done regarding the recent activity in railroad matters; some contending that the surveys were being made by the Hills, others claiming that it was the S. P. It matters little to the people of this region which company builds the road to the coast—the result will be practically the same. One thing is evident: whoever is making the survey means business and we predict that next spring the dirt will fly in earnest.

A Gift With a Thought in It.

There's one very simple way out of the Christmas shopping problem; don't shop, but sit quietly at home and subscribe for The Youth's Companion. The chances are, too, that no present you could buy for the young folks in the family you delight to honor could confer so much pleasure as this gift of The Youth's Companion for a whole pound year—fifty-two weeks' issues.

and the fifty-second as keenly anticipated and enjoyed as the very first.

There will be stories for readers of every age; sound advice as to athletics; suggestions for the girl at college or making her own way in the world; good things for every member of the family—all for $2.00—less than four cents a week.

The one to whom you give the subscription will receive free all the remaining issues of 1912, as well as The Companion Window Transparency and Calendar for 1913, in rich, translucent colors. It is to be hung in the window or over the lamp-shade. You, too, a giver of the present will receive a copy of it.

What Became of Alvaretta
A Case of Too Many Lovers
By CLARISSA MACKIE

"Where's Alvaretta?" he asked sharply.
"We haven't found out yet," explained Alva. "Who told you about it, anyway?"
"Why, of course I knew!" Dave laughed mirthlessly.
"Knew what?"
"That she was lost. I've been trying to find her all the afternoon."
Alva reddened angrily. "See here, Dave Bemis, you're crazy," he declared.
"So are you," retorted Dave promptly, when Mrs. Winton interposed a slender form between them.
"Stop your quarreling this very instant, boys," she commanded. "Now, Dave, you tell what you mean about your looking for Alvaretta. After you've told, why, we'll tell our story."
Dave Bemis hesitated, looked around at the interested faces, flushed redly and then plunged into his story.
"Alvaretta was to meet me in Milton at 1:15. We were going to get married."
"Married?" shrieked Mrs. Winton.
"Married?" growled young Alva, doubling a fist. "You mean you was running away with my sister?"
"She said her mother gave her permission to marry me this afternoon. My uncle in England is very sick, and I've been sent for. I've got to sail tomorrow morning, and I may be gone a year, for I promised to take care of his business and wind it up if anything happens to him. I telephoned all this to Alvaretta this morning as soon as I heard of it, and I asked her if she wouldn't marry me before I went. I told her she could take the 1:15 train from here, and I would meet her in Milton, and we could get married in time for her to take the 3:30 back here again. I was at the station and waited three trains, but I haven't seen her, and that's why I'm here now."

"For the land sake, I never heard of such a thing!" shrieked Mrs. Winton when Dave had concluded his recital. "Why, that child must have been asking me if she could marry Dave when I wasn't placing any account on what she was asking I was that interested in my doughnuts! I says to her, 'Yes, yes; run along, do!' and she took me at my word!"

"But where is she now?" demanded Alva impatiently.
"Yes; where is she now?" repeated Dave.

"Nobody knows. Listen while I tell you what we know about it."

So Dave listened while they told him about the mysterious disappearance of Alvaretta and how Irving Denby's statement that he had seen her on the way to the station was the only proof they had that Alvaretta had really started to meet her lover and be married.

"What shall we do now?" Dave was asking when the door was pushed slowly open and a girl's slender form stepped within the room. She wore a pretty blue dress showing traces of dust around the bottom and a white hat very much askew atop of her golden hair.

It was Alvaretta Winton.
"Alvaretta!" they all screamed at once.

"Has any one seen Irving Denby?" she asked, slowly looking from one to another. "Is he here now?"

"No—why?" Alva was holding one hand and Dave Bemis the other hand, and her mother had both arms around her neck. It was difficult for Alvaretta to answer until they freed her.

"I was going to say if he is here one of you must take him out and thrash him," said Alvaretta calmly, and thereupon she proceeded to give most excellent reasons why young Denby should be chastised.

"He sent word up to the house that I was wanted at the long distance telephone," said Alvaretta calmly, "and as mother was busy I just ran down the street and took the message, not knowing that Irving was in the back of the store listening at Mr. Peters' private phone. Dave wanted me to come down to Milton and marry him at once, so I told him I'd go home and ask mother and if she consented I'd meet him there on the arrival of the 4:35."

"Mother was frying doughnuts, and I could scarcely see her through the blue smoke, and the hissing of the hot fat was noisy too. I went up to her and spoke into her good ear. I said, 'Ma, Dave has telephoned that he's got to go to England and may be gone a year and I can go to Milton and marry him now. I'll come right home again!'"

"I didn't believe she'd consent, and so I was never more surprised in my life than when she said, 'Yes, yes; run along, do!' So I hurried and got ready, and as I passed the drug store I happened to notice that the door of our church was wide open. I was going to be married, and I felt kind of solemn and as if I wanted to be alone for a few minutes, so I just slipped inside there where it was dark and cool, and when I tried to get out I declared if the door wasn't locked. I cried and screamed, and nobody heard me until a half hour ago somebody crept up the steps and unlocked the door. I was right there and pulled the door open before he could get very far away. It was Irving Denby. Wasn't he the mean, jealous thing?"

Alvaretta glanced indignantly around before any one could answer there came a knock at the door. When it was opened it revealed the mild countenance of the minister.

"They tell me Alvaretta is lost," he was beginning when he saw the girl's blooming face.

Dave Bemis pressed forward, Alvaretta's hand in his.

"You're just in time, Mr. Evans," he said suggestively.

And that was how Alvaretta's elopement ended up in a wedding at home.

Windmills as Newspapers.
In Holland births, marriages and deaths, instead of being recorded in newspapers, are indicated by windmills. When a miller gets married he stops his mill with the arms of the wheel in a slanting position and with the sails unfurled. His friends and guests frequently do likewise with their mills, in token of the ceremony. To indicate a birth the wheel is slanted, but at a more acute angle than for a marriage and with the two upper sails unfurled. Should a miller die the sails of his mill are all furled and the wheel is turned round until the arms form an upright cross, in which position they are left until after the funeral has taken place.

An Inspiring Experience.
A lady who must certainly have been related to the late Mrs. Parlington recently returned from a seventy day tour of Europe.

To her friends she said with enthusiasm that of all the wonderful things that she had seen and heard she believed the thing she enjoyed most of all was hearing the French pheasants sing the mayonnaise—Youth's Companion.
