FISH BILL IS VETOED

Oswald West Applies Axe to Bill to Open Rogus River to Commercial Fishing.

Late Saturday Governor West vetoed the hill opening the Rogue river to con mercial fishing, taking the stand that as it was passed by the people it should only be repealed by them. A large petition from Ashland asking him to take such action was sent Saturday evening, they having already wired that the petition was in circulation. A Realistic Proposal

By EDNA B. TOWER

It was in the sweet summer time, when the insects were humming, the birds were twittering, the leaves were moving drowsily, that two young perons sat in a flower garden. If the restful scene about them were not enough to stir their young blood to love, the perfume of the flowers was more than enough.

"I went the other night," he said, "to see this young fellow Brown show off in palmistry. He read my lines, and it was really quite remarkable how many truths he told me."

"What did he tell you?" "Well, he said that I hadn't yet met the girl who would make me happy.' He looked at her searchingly. She looked out at the flowers,

"Did he say you had met the girl who would make you miserable?" she asked.

"Well, no; he didn't say anything about that." "Then he didn't mention any partic ular girl?" "No; he didn't." "Oh, I didn't know but that he had somebody with a red head and freckles in view." "He explained that what he meant was that I had met a girl who could make me happy if she wanted to, but that she didn't want to."

She was not to be drawn out in this fashion. Young men are prone to fish for a sign. They don't usually get it The girl prefers to have him do it all alone by himself. It's not her part to tell him anything to ald him in making up his mind whether he is to be accepted or thrown over her shoulder. "Did he say she was red headed?"

"No. Why do you ask that?" "Oh, everybody has noticed your attentions to Sue Baker." "Everybody except myself. I have not noticed it."

"Then it's time you did." His feeling around for a sign was not succeeding. There was a faint indication of jealousy in this continued introduction of a girl to whom he had shown some attention, but this didn't mean love or that he would be an accepted suitor if he proposed. He was ready to offer both love and marriage, but what man cares to do that without some assurance that he is not to be

"Miss Baker is a lovely girl," he said after a pause. "Any man who wins her I think she would make happy. Her bair isn't red, it's auburn, and I never noticed any freckles on

"I dare say she is a beautiful character. That's what you want, I suppose, and if you are color blind she would suit you very well." "I don't see what she has to do with this conversation. I didn't bring ber into it' He said this in a miffed tone. She recognized that it was time to tighten the line a bit-the fish might get off the "Are you going to the tennis tourns ment on Saturday?" she asked.

"I don't know. I'm not especially interested in tennis just now." "Got anything on your mind?"

"Nothing particular-I mean noth ing that should make me stay away from the tournament. Shall I drop in for you as I go by?" "I'm not sure I'll go."

"No: I have a partial engagement for Saturday."

"Oh! The men don't have to work Saturday afternoons. They have a chance to dally with their sweethearts. I should have remembered that." "I didn't say my engagement was with a man." "No, but that was to be inferred. Don't you think you could get out of It and go out for a spin in my auto?" She divined that this indicated an intention to put off what he was trying mask was a sign of distinction. With to get out till the auto ride. He had made several failures before, and she

> "No." she replied. "I couldn't." "I thought you said the engagement was only a partial one." "I can't go to ride anyway."

"Why not?" "Well, I'm going away on a visit, and on Saturday I must be making my preparations."

"How long are you going to be away?" "Several weeks or several months, maybe,"

This was beginning to wind in the line. He knew these weeks or months would be a miserable supense to him. He must brace up and know the worst before she went away.
