THE HIGHWAYMAN

How a Bracelet Became a Keep-:: :: sake :: ::

By EDNA L. SWIFT

One evening in the year 1648 a coach lumbered along the main highway between Glasgow and Edinburgh toward the latter city. It was the year that Oliver Cromwell, having closed the war with the parliament, defeated the Seetch royalists at Preston and ended the war. In those days the roads means of land transportation, were werst condition possible. Two persons within the coach, a gentleman and his daughter, were tossed about as it lurched in the ruts and mudholes which the driver could hardly have avoided even had there been something better than an oil lamp on each side of the vehicle to light the way. Presently a rear wheel went down to the axle, and the coach, careening on that side, came to a stop. For some ten minutes the driver lashed the horses in a vain effort to force them to pull it out and. at er a rest, was about to begin again w en by the dim side lights the travelers were able to discern the figure

That he was a highwayman was evident from the concealment of his features, but his first words were not in the least terrifying. "Wait a bit," he said to the coachman, "till I bring a lever with which to get the wheel on to dry land." And with that he disappeared in the darkness, returning in a few minutes with a fencepost, one end of which he placed under the rear axle and the other end on his shoulder. Then, calling on the driver to again apply the lash, the coach was lifted on to firmer ground.

"Now," said the man who had secured this result to the gentleman in the couch, "the laborer being worthy of his hire. I shall have to trouble you for your valuables. It pains me to do this; bu., the war being over and the king no longer able to pay his soldiers, I must needs get a living the best way I can."

"Alas," replied the gentleman in the coach, "that is a case of one beggar cailing on another for help. The Duke of Hamilton in order to pay the troops that Cromwell had so ably defeated has taken everything I possessed exeact my home. I am on my way to Ediaburgh to try to make a loan on that which will tide me over these strenuous times.

"In that case," replied the highwayman, "please accept my services gratis.

While this brief dialogue was being spoken the lady in the coach sat concealed in a corner so that the highwayman did not see her. But as he, having mounted his horse, was about to ride away she leaned forward and, taking a bracelet from her wrist, extended it toward bim, saying:

"It is not meet that one of the king's defenders should go unrewarded for a service Take this, and may the day some come when his majesty shall be able to take care of his own."

There was sufficient light from the coach lamp for the man to see that she was a young girl and beautiful. He sat so absorbed in the vision of love Hu ss before him that for a moment be did not heed her words; then, taking the bracelet, he said:

shall return it in person." "If you do," said her father, "you shall be hanged for what you are-a rot ber. My daughter and I are not agreed upon these troublous times. I am with the parliament. I understand that many of the king's hirelings, now that their occupation has gone, have taken to the road. Cromwell will soon be our ruler, and be will then clear our hirl ways of these gentlemen robbers."

Cludly tell me who you are," said the other, "that I may give Old Noll an opportunity to stretch my neck. He will doubtless bring his sovereign to the block, and I would not deprive him of the pleasure of bringing one of his ma lesty's loval subjects to the halterthe is, if you can turn me over to htm " "I am Donald Mactvor, and my home is on this road midway between Glasgov and Edinburgh. But I warn you to keep away, for I shall surely turn you over to the hangman if you come upon my grounds."

The highwayman made no contr to thi. but, lifting his har to the lady. disappeared to the darkness. This we this first effected at robbery, and It is accorded with his rank or his inell ations. He was a younger son of a So teh laird who in order to save his est te had taken neither the side of the king nor the parliament. He left the travelers, but felt very despondent, for als first effort at a highwayman's career was not to his liking, and he knew of no other occupation unless he went to France and became a bireling soldier of the French king. One thing he was decided upon-that sooner or later he would take the bracelet he had received and clasp it with his own hands upon the wrist from which it had been removed.

King Charles I was brought to trial and 'schended at the beginning of the for ess no year. The fortunes of the rosadets were at a low chh and were nes destined to improve till King Charles II. was restored to the throne greatly enjoyed it.

more than a decade later. Meanwhile the young Scot, who had made ons attempt at a career on the highway, being proscribed by Cromwell's government, went to France, where he found Prince Charles, who secured him a commission in the French army. One evening there was a ball in progress in the manor house of Donald Maclyor. He and profited by Cromwell's success and was disposed to win over as many of his neighbors to the new regime as possible. The fete he gave on this occasion was with this end in view. Among the guests was a young man who was not known and had not been invited to the ball. But amid so great a throng the presence of the stranger was not noticed. Presently he approached the oldest daughter of the house and said "I must ask you to pardon my intrusion here, for I have not been in-I have returned to Scotland after several years' absence on being advised of my older brother's death. My father, Sir Malcolm Douglas, who were unpaved and, being the only lived beyond the Grampian mountains, died two years ago, and my brother much used and consequently in the died recently. I am therefore Sir Walter Douglas."

"And why." asked the lady, whose cheek paled at the sound of his voice and whose bosom was heaving, "did you not obtain an invitation, which I am sure my father would have"- She paused, and the young man replied to her question before she had finished:

"Because I am a proscribed royalist." Placing her hand on his arm, she led him to a window seat where they would not be noticed. They were scarcely seated before he clasped a bracelet about her wrist.

"Go away from here," she said under her breath. "My father may noof a masked man on the road beside tice that you are a stranger and inquire who you are. Should be recognize you by your voice, as I have done, your life will pay the penalty of your

"My life is worth little to me, nor has it been of value to me since the night I saw your face lighted by a coach lamp, for I have been an exile. But recently I have inherited the estate which my father saved by remaining neutral in our troubles. Yet, besides my loyalty to our rightful sovereign, there is but one act in my life to keep me from enjoying my heritage. an act of highway robbery. I have returned the booty taken on that occasion, and I crave your forgiveness.

will never forgive you." "There is a chance. He may not recognize me as the highwayman. Should be not there is no reason why I should not make myself known as a Scotch laird recently come into an estate, for the war has for some time past been over, and there are, I understand, to be no more persecutions for loyalty to the king." "But in the event of my father recognizing you as the highwayman I would not give a farthing for your He has often spoken of that episode and vowed that should you make good your words to return my bracelet he would see you hanged high as Haman. Keep it," she added, taking it off. "I would not dare wear it."

"As a keepsake?"

"Yes." "I am resolved," said the young man after a pause, "to take the one chance (37). clearing his throat while speaking to disguise his voice, "took neither side. Now there is but one side to take." The speaker glanced at the girl, fearing that she would betray him by her emoition rather than that he would be recognized by his voice. Fortunately her father was looking at Douglas and did not see her efforts to re press it. But at this noncommittal reply MacIvor turned away to his dutles as host. His daughter gave a long drawn sigh of relief and led her guest to another part of the house. After another interview behind window curtains he left her with her assurance that he would be always welcome.

That part of Scotland lying beyond the Grampian mountains was in those days a wist country. Sir Walter frongles went to his estate and, taking no part in the later futile attempts of the Stuarts to regain the throne of England and Scotland, was not disturbed by the parliamentary government. Later he made a second appearance at MacIvor's home to ask for the hand of the old man's daughter. It was gladly bestowed upon him, and after a wedding ceremony during which the father gave his daughter away to the man who had robbed him -Sir Walter had the keepsake in his pocket when being married-the knight of February, 1913. took his bride to his remote home. When Charles II. was restored to the throne the pair were prominent at court, and Lady Douglas often told the story of the bracelet, wearing it openly on her wrist, to the merry monarch. It is needless to add that his magesty
