MARRIED

HENRY—BAILEY. At Jacksonville, Oregon, Sunday June 29, 1913, by Rev. H. W. Rumsel; Will S. Henry and Vera J. Bailey.

The "Dog-fish" Body.

We have had submarine bodies and aeroplane bodies, one designer has gone so far as to bring out a terra-marine body, and now comes the "dog-fish" body which is said to represent the very acme of perfection for touring service. The "dog-fish" body is simply an ordinary touring body, or rather a torpedo body, in which the sides are extended to inclose the running boards, thus providing ample space for the storing of tool boxes, parts, etc. The spare tires are accommodated in a bulbous back and the side door giving entrance to the compartment over the step, is wide enough to pass a rather large trunk. The horn and the lamps are quite invisible and when folded the top disappears into a compartment at the back of the body. When in touring trim, the car is said to be waterproof.—Ex.

Breaking as Fallow is Best.

(BY PROF. SHAW)

In the early days of settlement in Dakota and in much of the Canadian west, the plan was common to break in the early summer quite shallow and then to backset the same fall. To backset meant simply to plow deeper so as to throw the partially decayed sod under and to put cover earth brought up from below on top of it. The plan was good where it was practiced. The shallow breaking killed the grass in the dry, hot weather that followed, and in these areas there was enough of moisture usually in the autumn to make the deeper plowing practicable. Moreover, only spring sown grain was grown in these areas, and this gave the whole autumn to do the backsetting.

This plan is not usually recommended or followed in the dry areas of the American Northwest, for the reason, first, that winter wheat is very commonly made the first crop, and where it is there would be no chance for backsetting, nor would it be wise to sow winter wheat on breaking so shallow. It is recommended, therefore, to break more deeply, as deep as five to six inches, and to work the ground subsequently on the summer fallow plan until the time comes for sowing winter wheat, which is usually in August. Where winter wheat is not to follow, it would answer to break shallow and then backset in the autumn, but to the plan there is the objection, that in much of the Northwest the weather is so dry in the autumn that the backsetting would be difficult of accomplishment. The aim is to break in the spring and until well on in June, and to break to the depth named. The earlier that the breaking is done in the season, the more is the amount of moisture that may be gotten into the soil. The plan is to compress with disk or packer as soon as plowed, to make a soil mulch at once, with the harrow and to maintain the same until the sowing of the wheat or until the end of the season, if winter wheat or rye are not to be sown. The next crop that may legitimately follow is flax, and it may be grown by simply preparing the land by discing. The buried sod is thus left buried two years before it is brought up again, which is favorable to decay.

However, the plan of breaking rather shallow in the spring and sowing flax on the land as soon as broken, has come to be practiced more than the method recommended above. It has has originated in the necessities of the homesteader. He was often badly in need of cash and that promised the the easiest and quickest way of getting it. The unusually high prices paid for flax during recent years greatly encouraged the practice. It has merit so far as the flax crop is concerned. In a normal season, a good crop of flax may be exdected from shallow breaking if sown on time.

Zigzag Lightning

Photography long ago proved that what was once taken for zigzag lightning is really sinuous; i. e., without sharp angles. Otto Meissner, in Das Wetter, offers an explanation of the angular appearance of lightning. He believes that the sudden glare of the flash causes an involuntary movement of the head or eye; the original image of the flash persists for a moment on the retina, along with the image produced on the eye in its new position. Thus we get the impression of a broken line.—Scientific American Montenegro's Stones.

Montenegro has, after all, some reason to be grateful for its stones. "It is in these stones," writes William Miller, "that the Black mountain has found its best fortifications—for artificial forts it has none—and it was not till the time of the present prince (now King Nicholas) that the Napoleonic idea of making a road across the country was carried out. Even now it is not by any means certain that this improved means of communication will not be a source of danger in the future."

Napoleon in the early years of the nineteenth century offered to construct a roadway across the principality at his own expense, but his overtures were summarily rejected. He then threatened to lay waste the country with fire and sword till its name became Monte Rosso ("the red mountain") instead of Montenegro. The threat, however, was never carried out.—London Chronicle.

Norway and Trotting Horses.

From tales of travel and other sources of information it appears that Norway was one of the first countries to develop speed in the trotting horse, which centuries ago seems to have been common to the nations of northern Europe. Sigvried Petersen says that as early as the beginning of the eighteenth century there were informal trotting races in Christiana. The principal name in the history of the sport is that of Jacob Meyer, chief of the royal mounted militia, who was born in 1781. He owned the noted horse Sleijner-Varg that on March 15, 1829, trotted an English mile in 2:37 and repeated in the same time. This was faster than any horse had then trotted in America, so far as is known. In Sweden and in Finland the sport of trotting horses dates back, it is said, to prehistoric times. With long winters and nothing else to do the people raced their horses to sleighs on the ice. Sunday morning was the great occasion, men and horses coming from miles around to take part in or witness the sport.—New York Herald.

Her Early Life In Germany.

In her book entitled "Scenes and Memories" Walburga Lady Paget has this to say of her early life in Germany: "We run about without shoes or stockings in the grass; we wore a minimum of clothes; in summer we were plunged into the river, a wide and rushing mountain stream; in winter we had to break the ice in our tubs and our nurses dashed basins of icy water over our backs. I can still feel the thin bits of ice mixed with the water slithering down over me. A fire in our bedrooms was never thought of, and the schoolroom was never more than 9 degrees Reaumur (52 F.). I was fourteen or fifteen before I knew what it was to have something to drink at breakfast, as I did not like milk. Bread, with a little butter, was all I ever had. An egg for a child, if it was not ill, was considered quite absurd. Between meals we were given abundance of fruit."

Half a century ago a medical student lodging in London so ingratiated himself in the eyes of his landlady that on his departure for Hobart to practice she asked him to accept a souvenir of his London home, and he took a picture which had been in his sitting room. This picture remained in his house for upward of forty years without attracting any particular notice, but then its hour struck, for a visitor detected merit in it and advised the owner to forward a description of it to London. He did so, and the picture, which turned out to be a Romney, fetched 3,500 guineas. The best of the story is that the Tasmanian editor who printed an account of the matter gave the price as 350 guineas, saying that he did so because he did not believe that any picture could be worth the larger sum.—London Sphere.
