

A Chinese Umbrella

By REGINALD D. HAVEN

I was dining the other day with my friend Alan Bonbright. Mrs. Bonbright is the daughter of a missionary whose field was in China, and she had spent most of her girlhood there. Her husband had been to China on business, met her there and brought her home with him as his wife.

Mrs. Bonbright, a girl at this time, was with her father at his missionary station in the province of Shantung. After dinner I was taken to a room where a collection of souvenirs of the Flowery Kingdom was kept. Among them was an umbrella made of bamboo wood and paper, covered with the customary pictures of men and women, birds and flowers. Across it when expanded were Chinese characters which, of course, I could not read. Bonbright directed my attention to the umbrella, and Mrs. Bonbright said, "If you're going to tell that story I'll go elsewhere." She went out with a look indicating that I was about to hear something unpleasant.

"You know," said Bonbright, "that China is full of persons who live by highway robbery. They cut off their heads whenever they capture them, but this doesn't seem to deter others, for life is cheap there and only the better classes care much about their own or others' terrestrial existence. Well, one day I was traveling on horseback through the province of Shantung. I had no mind to be set upon by the highwaymen and had armed myself. There is not much fight in even the robbers in China unless they have every advantage, and I didn't feel in much danger so long as I could defend myself.

"I was not attacked myself; but, hearing a shouting ahead of me, I pressed forward and found a Chinaman in the dress of a mandarin being set upon by a gang of robbers. I fired shots at them, and they left their prey in a sorry plight and took to their heels. I picked him up and set him to rights. I had come up just in time to save his pocket-book, and he offered me a portion of its contents as a reward. This, of course, I declined, whereupon he talked his thanks so I supposed, for I did not understand a word he said. Just before I left him he took a writing stick and wrote those characters you see there on the umbrella and gave it to me. There was nothing to do but accept it, and as the day was hot I used it.

"Every Chinaman I met looked at the umbrella, then at me, and their indifference was at once turned to reverence. Some of them stopped and saluted as I passed. I wondered if they mistook me for the governor of a province or an executioner. Singularly enough, I didn't catch on to the fact that it was the umbrella that was drawing forth such respect.

"I stopped that night at the missionary station presided over by my wife's father and found them in great trouble. They had got wind through some of the Christian natives, servants and others attached to the mission of the Boxer movement that was about to break forth. My wife was then a girl of nineteen and the oldest of a family of seven. The converts were in a terrible state of fear, which naturally communicated itself to the white family.

"Drowning persons will cling to a straw, and this family clung to me. True, I was only one man, but I was well armed, and even one man might be of some protection. I suppose I would have remained anyway, but I could not leave the girl who struck my fancy. When she looked appealingly at me with those blue eyes of hers I could not resist and said I would remain with them till the trouble was over.

"Remembering how easily I had put to flight the robbers, I really thought that with my two revolvers and some fifty cartridges I would be a protection, but when I heard the shrieks of the Christian converts as the crowd approached the mission house I didn't like the prospect. The yells of the brutes who were murdering them were equally appalling. What could I do against an infuriated mob?

"However, I stationed myself at an upper window, laying my ammunition and extra pistols beside me. I called upon Ethel to stay beside me and load them for me as fast as I fired, and she nerved herself to do so. I put my head out and, seeing the mob coming reeking with blood, my heart sank. Wishing something to conceal me from them, I took up the umbrella the mandarin had given me, opened it, fixed it before me at the window and poked holes through it so that I could see where to fire.

"The mob had broken into the next house and killed every one there, then was ready to storm the mission. Already an ax had fallen on the door below me when I saw a man look at my umbrella and become much excited. He ran forward, then back with the man who wielded the ax. A knot of rioters gathered all looking at the umbrella. Not another blow was struck. I did not need to fire a single shot. The mob seemed disappointed, but passed on.

"As soon as it had gone I withdrew the umbrella. Ethel, who could read Chinese as well as English, clasped her hands, raised her eyes to heaven and gave thanks. Then she interpreted the characters to me. It was an order from the greatest mandarin in the province to 'respect this man and all that belongs to him.'
