Japanese Food Boxes. "Japanese dishes fall to satisfy American cravings," says an officer in the United States army. 'Imagine a diet without milk, bread, butter, jam, coffee, salad or any sufficient quantity of nicely cooked vegetables without pudding, stewed fruit and with comparatively little fresh fruit. The European regetarian will find as much difficulty in making anything out of it as the ordinary meat eater. Along the main radiroad artery neat little boxes of Japanese food (bento) are offered for sale at the principal stations at a cost of 71/2 cents; also pots of tea, including teapot and earthen teacup, for 2 cents. The bento may contain in neat separate compartments prawn fish, chicken, rice, preserved ginger, johnnycake, omelette, a brolled mushroom, a slice of radish, glazed beans, kind of sweet pickle; thee, a slice of cooked chestaut, licorice, etc. The bento is invitfing to the eye, is garnished in green. is neatly wrapped and the contents varied as the resources of the locality

A Famous Window. York minster, in addition to its many other notable features, contains one of the most remarkable windows in the world-the east window, which is the largest in England, except that In Gloucester cathedral. It is seventyfive feet high and thirty-five feet broad. The window is divided into 200 compartments, all of which illustrate leading events in sacred history. Each pane of glass is three feet square. the figures measuring two feet four inches high. The upper part is filled with beautiful tracery and is divided from the lower by the narrow stone gallery which runs across, John Thornton of Coventry began the window in the year 1405. The ancient glazing, all of which he executed with his own hands, stands unequaled to the present day, and for this enormous task he received as wages 4 shillings a week for three years and £10 on completing his work to the satisfaction

During the long exposure the photographer left the room a moment. On his return everything seemed to be going all right. But when the exposure ended and he rushed to his closet to develop the wet plate there was nothing on it but a blur.

Very much disgusted, he showed this blur to the sitter.

"You must have moved," he said. The sitter looked at the spoiled plate and laughed in amazement. "Well, I declare," he said; "who'd have thought that just running over to the window for a minute to see a drunken man would have done all that? I sat right down again."-Minneapolis Journal.

Two Strenuous Lives.

Clovis Hughes, the French journalist, poet and duelist, filled his fifty-five years of life with sufficient excitemen to make him wonthy of special men tion. One of his claims to distinction was that he bad engaged in a French duel which regulted fatally-for the other man. He was a tempestuous radical and was once suspended from the chamber of deputies for insulting remarks to the president, which did not at all curb him. He wrote a num of novels, poems and plays in which he sought to spread socialistic propaganda, and he wrote a preten tious five act drama in verse called "Le Sommell de Danton" ("The Sleep of Danton"), which was produced at the Opera Comique. His wife contributed her share of excitement by killing a public official in the palace of justice because of an alleged insult. Before she was tried she wrote and acted "La Vegeance de Mme. Clovis Hughes." The play depicted her sensational act and represented her as triumphantly exonerated by the court. When her trial came the court did as predicted.

The origin of gloves is very ancient Song, authorities assert that they were known in Bible times, from references made to "shoes" which were thought to be identical with gloves. The first clear account of gloves comes, however, from Xenophon. This writer speaks of the Persians wearing gloves on their hands to protect them from the cold. Homer describes Laertes working in his garden with gloves upon his hands to protect them from the thorns, and Varro mentions this apparel as being worn by the Romans Gloves have been tokens of solemn and important things from the ninth century. They were adopted as a rite of the church, and later the transferring of lands or titles was always attended with the presentation of gloves. In the eleventh century the method of challenging to single combat by throwing down a glove was instituted, and this custom still remains in some coun-
