HE WAS SQUARE.

By MARTHA V. MONROE

"That new head I hired today," said Farmer Jenks, "is the homeliest man I ever set eyes on. He's long limbed, knobby jointed, red headed, freckled, blue eyed, snaggle toothed, and when he smiles one would suppose he had the stomach ache."

The farmer spoke these words early in July, when the wheat was being cut. One day in August, when the corn was ready to be gathered, Newton Simmonds stepped up to his employer and said:

"Mr. Simmonds, would y' mind my keepin' company with your darter, expectin' to marry her?"

"What do you mean, you red headed galoot?"

"Just what I say. Eunice is the prettiest gal I ever seen, and I'm dead gone on her. But I wouldn't say anything to her about it without gittin' your permit. There ain't nothin' underhanded about me."

"See here, Newt," said the farmer, struck with the man's sense of honor, "my daughter is spoken for. She's goin' to marry Hasbrouk's son; you're not in the race at all. Now just put it out of your head."

"I won't put it outen my head because I can't, but I won't say nothin' to Eunice, either, seein' you don't want me too. When a man brings up a darter, the apple of his eye, its darn mean for a feller he don't want to have her to go steal her away from him."

"You're dead right, Newt. I'm very much pleased to hear you talk like that."

This dialogue occurred in the barn, and the subject of it, Eunice Jenks, was in the chicken house gathering eggs at the time, so she heard every word of it. She was engaged to marry young Tom Hasbrouk and satisfied to do so, for he would one day own the Hasbrouk farm, and her parents desired the match.

Farmer Jenks said nothing to his daughter as to the new application for her hand. One day soon after it was made he saw Eunice walk down to where Simmonds was at work. She chatted with the farm hand for a few minutes, then went on her way to the village. Her father thought nothing of this and soon forgot all about it.

The next day when Simmonds was cutting hay he saw Hasbrouk walking rapidly toward Simmonds, who was driving a reaper. Simmonds stopped his team and Hasbrouk stood by him talking angrily, though Jenks could not hear what was said. Presently Simmonds jumped down from his seat and aimed a blow at Hasbrouk. Then followed a rough and tumble fight in which Simmonds downed Hasbrouk and sat on him. Presently he let his enemy up and Hasbrouk walked away.

"That must be about Eunice," said the farmer. "I wonder how Tom got on to the fact that Newt wants her?"

From a window Eunice had watched the fight and seen her lover worsted. She had been the cause of the trouble, but this did not prevent her from going out later to Simmonds and asking him what was the matter between him and Hasbrouk.

"He riled me with his talk," Simmonds replied.

"Talk about what?"

Simmonds hesitated for a moment, then said, "Reckon, Miss Jenks, you'll have to ask Hasbrouk about that."

Eunice didn't press the matter, because she knew all about the cause of the trouble already.

"Dad," she said one day not long after this episode, "it's all up between Tom and me."

"What?" exclaimed the astonished parent.

"I reckon I don't want him."

"I'm mighty sorry about that," said the farmer, disappointed. "I kind o' thought you was provided for in case anything should happen to me. What's the matter?"

"Oh, nothin'; we just don't happen to work in harness together."

The farmer, knowing that he could not force his daughter into a match that did not please her, said no more. He must wait for some other suitor for his daughter's hand. Who that suitor would be he did not know. Eunice went quite often to the store and he rather suspected that one of the clerks there had excited her sympathies.

One day Newt stepped up to him and said:

"I hope y' won't blame me, Mr. Simmonds."

"Blame you for what?"

"Why, Eunice told me to come to you to ask you for her."

Henri Rochefort and Beranger.

One finds an interesting link with the past in the fact that Henri Rochefort began his literary career as a poet and in that character presented a poem, together with a letter of introduction, to no less a literary master than Beranger, whose reply, carefully preserved by the distinguished journalist, is interesting.

"Can it be true," Beranger wrote, "that you are only sixteen? If I had written verses so well turned at that age I should indeed have believed that a great destiny was in store for me. But then you college gentlemen are brought up, as it were, in forcing houses, whereas when I was sixteen I hardly knew how to spell. Remember, then, all the devices employed for the development of your faculties and do not be too uplifted by vanity at the praises of an old rascal, dazzled by your compliments."

And the letter concludes with a commendation to the young aspirant to return to his studies and not to chafe hence serious criticism by premature publication Westminster Gazette.

To See Through Paper.

A very remarkable experiment which any one can repeat with very little trouble has been unearthed by a German. Take a piece of paper of such thickness that when it is laid upon a piece of printed matter the characters just show through, but cannot be read. Place it over a printed sheet, impart to it a circular motion, and fro, and to your surprise you will find that now you can read the print below the paper. It is rather difficult to explain this peculiar effect. The explanation of it is that the paper has thin places in it, and by rapidly moving it over the print every part of the printed matter is exposed in turn underneath one or the other of the thin places in the paper, and thus the entire print can be read. However that may be, the experiment is interesting and very simple, requiring for its performance only the simplest means imaginable.—New York Press.

Helping Her Mamma.

The Youngs had dropped in unexpectedly upon the Ballers just as dinner was about to be served. Mother, who was somewhat disturbed, called Helen aside and explained that there would not be oysters enough to go around and added: "Now, you and I will just have some of the broth. And please do not make any fuss about it at table."

Little Helen promised to be good and say nothing. But when the oysters were served Helen discovered a small one that had been accidentally landed up with her broth. She could not remember any instructions that covered this contingency, so, after studying the situation awhile, she held the oyster up as high as she could on her spoon and piped out:

"Mamma, mamma, shouldn't Mrs. Young have this oyster too?"—New York Globe.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured
by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed, you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces. We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free. P. J. CHENEY, & CO., Toledo, Ohio.
