CARAVELS OF COLUMBUS

Will Pass Through Panama Canal and Visit San Diego Next Summer.

San Diego, Cal., Sept. 4.—San Diego is to see the reproductions of the caravels of Columbus, the Santa Maria, the Pinta and the Nina, and the harbor of San Diego is to be the first one on the Pacific Coast of the United States to hail them, after they have passed through the Panama Canal. These reproductions of the caravels of Columbus, constructed for the World's Columbian Exposition in Chicago in 1893, have been in Jackson Park, in Chicago ever since that time, but on the fifteenth of the present month they left the Jackson Park lagoon, and really started on their long journey to the Pacific Coast. They were first taken to the drydock at South Chicago, where they will remain until they are made entirely seaworthy. From Chicago the little fleet will proceed to Boston, and there they will tie up for the winter. In the spring they will be manned by crews of students from Harvard and begin their long cruise. It is planned to skirt the Atlantic, stopping at San Salvador, the first land discovered by Columbus, and then on to Panama and through the canal. Doubtless the little vessels will be compelled to stop at some Pacific port on the west coast of Central America or Mexico for supplies, but the first stop on American soil after their passage through the canal will be at San Diego. Andrew Kaul, of Boston, a Harvard man, is behind the movement to bring the caravels to the Pacific Coast for the exposition in 1915. He has furnished the Jackson Park authorities a sufficient bond to insure their return to Chicago. Winfield Hogaboom of the San Diego Exposition, has taken upon the matter of entertainment of the crews of the ships while they are in San Diego harbor, with Mr. Kaul, and has been assured that the fleet will stop in San Diego harbor for a sufficient time to permit of proper and fitting ceremonies, in connection with the Panama-California Exposition in San Diego.

American Woods go to Orient.

Recent statistics indicate a marked increase in exports of lumber from the United States to the Orient. More than a quarter of a million feet of American woods are reported as being used in Samoa, Hawaii, and the Philippine Islands. Heretofore, it is said, raw materials have been made up into finished articles in the United States, almost without exception, and exported as such. With the discovery by American manufacturers in the Philippines that they could import United States woods and make them up with profit there, wood-using factories were built. Pacific coast woods, in consequence, are in many cases taking the place of the native woods with such picturesque names as apitong, teak, narra, and yacal. Douglas fir, according to the information collected by the forest service, is the principal wood exported from this country. It is said to be the favorite wood among insular manufacturers for flooring, ceiling, siding, cornice, shelving, finish, and boat work. Makers of furniture demand California redwood and sugar pine, southern quarter-sawn oak, sugar maple, and western white pine. Four woods, principally conifers and oaks, go into the construction of boats; for framing parts, masts, spars, interior trim, planking, boat crooks, and tiller handles. Meat blocks are made from sugar maple, which with sycamore supplies the entire demand in the United States. Wagon fellos are made of white oak, and other parts of vehicles are manufactured from high grades of white ash and white oak.

Dated at Jacksonville, Jackson County, Oregon, this 26th day of August, A. D. 1913. (Signed) M. D. JONES, City Marshal of the City of Jacksonville, Oregon.

Coast Guards in England.

Should a coast guard in Great Britain stationed at any particular place fail in love there, say, with the village beauty, his marriage is instantly followed by his transfer to another and generally far distant station. The reason for this is that in the old days, when smuggling was universal at small coast towns, the marriage of a coast guard with a girl living in the locality was considered dangerous, as it might interfere with him in the discharge of his duties should any of the smuggling parties be among his wife's relatives, and a regulation was framed compelling the newly married man to be instantly transferred elsewhere. To this day, therefore, and in places where smuggling is an unheard of practice, the unfortunate coast guard, directly after his marriage, must drag his wife away from the home of her youth and her family ties and dwell where she could have little chance of revisiting her people.

Wonderful Reasoning.

We had taken the tram at Dupont circle, and as we swung around into Connecticut avenue I said to my companion: "Do you see that lady across the aisle?" "You mean the left handed girl?" "I mean the one with the blue scarf." "Yes, the left handed one." "My dear," I replied, "I acknowledge that you have reduced deduction to a science, but surely you are jesting when you pretend to say that you can pick out a left handed girl at a glance." "Nothing easier, my dear Watson. By glancing at her but you will see that she is wearing an enormous hat pin and that the jeweled head of the pin is on the left side of her millinery. Nothing easier, my dear Watson—a mere trifle." "Oh Mrs. Meyer how do you do! It's an age since I've seen you! Any thing new with you?" "Only my husband"—Elegante Blatter

Just a Trifle.

There are times when God asks nothing of his children except silence and patience. Robinson.

This Time the Lawyer Scored.

A lawyer appeared before one of the New York city boards asking that damages be awarded to certain clients because of a change of grade in their street. When he had completed his argument the president said: "Mr. Blank, you ought to know better than to take up the time of this board in this manner. You are too good a lawyer not to allow that on your own presentation of facts these people have not the shadow of a legal claim against the city." "Your remarks are fully justified, Mr. President," said Mr. Blank. "I not only expected them, but you have done me a favor by making them. There are times when a lawyer is so pushed by his clients who seem to know more about the law than he does that the only thing he can do is to let them come up against it themselves. They probably know as much about it now as I did before. I thank you for your attention." With that he took up his books and left the room, followed by a half dozen crestfallen clients.

An Apt Retort.

"Fools sometimes ask questions that wise men cannot answer," remarked the professor in the course of his lecture. "Then that explains why so many of us get plucked in our examinations," said the flippant student.—Home Notes

Identifying Himself.

It is said that at certain seasons in Scotland when the fishing is not very brisk the fishermen act as caddies and are easily recognized by their costume, a woollen jersey and trousers braced up to the armpits. One of these was asked his name by the gentleman for whom he was carrying and the reply was, "Weel, herenabouts they maist ca' me 'Brecks', but ma 'maiden' name is 'Broon'."
