PRESERVE THE FORESTS

Lumbering Greatest Manufacturing Industry

Washington, Dec. 2.—According to E. T. Allen of Portland, Oregon, lumbering is the greatest American manufacturing industry and is exceeded only by agriculture in supplying the essentials of life. In an address before the conservation congress today Mr. Allen called attention to the comparative lack of the public's knowledge of the economics of subjects which touch each individual so closely as forestry and lumbering.

Mr. Allen is a forester of the western forestry and conservation association, an organization of lumbermen whose principal activity is the protection of their holdings from fire. A large part of the association's efforts are directed to making the public realize the loss which each individual suffers, directly and indirectly from forest destruction. In this connection he pointed out that forest preservation can not be conducted wholly by business managers or boards of directors. "It is a mutual cooperative enterprise," he said, "requiring daily participation by all concerned. The American forest policy must exist not because a few say it should, but because a majority of citizens understand what is needed and why it is needed and put the policy into effect."

Nailing The Lie

Another business man who saw no harm in misrepresenting goods through the medium of advertisements has been made to realize that his lack of moral perception is costly. Forty dollars was the price in this instance—first announced by the Municipal Court and later confirmed by the Circuit Court. Moreover there was a little lecture which went along with the Circuit Court's judgment, just by way of trimmings. It was proclaimed as part of the court's policy that similar appeals would be met with similar results.

This case was one of those old-fashioned, "all-wool" affairs that proved to be half cotton. It fell under the ban of the law as recently enacted, thanks to the finer advertising conscience of the time and state; and that which a few years ago would have been looked upon as a harmless, business-like stretching of the long-bow is an actual offense which costs money as a penalty.

There are few laws, governing what we term as minor offenses that will prove of more widespread benefit than this which penalizes the man who deliberately lies in his advertising. The benefit is to the public who reads the advertisement and to the business man who has it printed that the public may read it. It is difficult to say which of these will profit the most by honesty of statement.

The public will be glad to know that the statements it reads in advertising columns are to be held in a certain measure of suspicion. It is a good idea to get such information as is possible, and to give it a fair trial. The business man profits in the increased confidence of the public; whereas when he lies in the advertisement went unchallenged the advertiser who told the truth was likely to suffer the same as the other fellow who was utterly indifferent to truth. It has been said that the truth should not be told at all times, but under the law, it is well to remember that this does not apply to advertising. Telegram

Caught by His White Hair

By MARTHA EVERS HAM

When I was a girl of seventeen was far older than my years. Young fellows of my own age seemed to me what they really were—heartless boys. They were full of sports and nonsense whereas I was philosophically inclined. I loved to talk with men who knew a great deal more than I did—men who could talk learnedly on a variety of subjects. Thus I was thrown in with those who were usually double my age.

But my intimacy with such persons was entirely intellectual. Nothing akin to love was excited by any of them. Indeed, many of them had passed middle age and were incapable of sympathizing with a girl in her teens. While it was true that I had intellectual cravings, it was also true that I was still a young girl. There were times when I wished for companionship with young persons. But I was rather inclined to be young with them than that they—I refer to the men—should be young with me. What I mean is that there is a certain dignity in a young man that a girl looks for in one whom she would consider seriously as a possible life companion.

When I was nineteen my father decided that I should finish my education by a trip abroad. We sailed one February morning for Naples, intending to work our way northward with the opening spring, spending the hot summer months in Switzerland. On reaching Naples, when we were going ashore in the ship's tender, I noticed a young man whose hair had evidently turned prematurely gray. Never have I seen so striking a contrast between a young face and white hair. He appeared to be recovering from an illness. He sat opposite me in the boat, and for the life of me I could not keep my eyes off his contrasting features. He knew that I was looking at him, and this fixed his attention upon me.

We drove from the custom house to the hotel, our party of three in an open cab loaded down with hand baggage. On the way we passed another cab containing the white haired young man. Again we exchanged glances as he drove by us, and when we brought up at the hotel entrance he was getting out of his cab to enter the house. I confess I was secretly pleased that he would be at the same abiding place.

That very evening an acquaintance of my father introduced the young man to us as George Caruthers, telling us that he had been ill and was traveling for his health. The introduction would be grateful for my attention might show his friend. Mother sympathized with Mr. Caruthers, a stranger in a strange land and not strong. She made quite a pot of him, and we left Naples, he having no definite plans, she invited him to travel with us.

A party traveling for pleasure becomes intimate at once. In those days of old the only way of making new old friends, if I may be allowed the expression, is travel in company with others. I was during a sojourn in the principal Italian cities from Naples to Milan and on the railways connecting them a constant companion of George Caruthers. It seemed to me that there was as great a contrast in his disposition as there was in his outward features. He had the quiet dignity, the depth of understanding of a man and the freshness of youth. These accorded admirably with his appearance. He had, too, a way of falling in with my moods. When I wished him serious he was serious; when I preferred that he should be youthful he was youthful.

These persons with young faces and white hair are very deceptive as to their age. I angled with Mr. Caruthers to draw from him his age. I elicited certain bits of information from him with the intention of putting them together and thus deducing how old he was. But he soon divined my intention and gave his answer in a way to defeat my purpose. Then he would laugh at me for my failure.

We reached northern Italy in a couple of months, and by this time my newly made friend had quite recovered his strength. His complexion was naturally florid, and the contrast between his face and his hair under his improved condition was the greater. He was always close shaven, but I could see that his beard did not partake of the color of his hair. But even this was difficult to determine, for his beard was evidently meager and of a light hue.

It is well nigh impossible for a young man to travel in company with a young girl without an affair of the heart, and our case was no exception. George Caruthers proposed to me on Lake Lemano just before we reached Geneva. In reply I told him that I had but one objection to him—that which was now an attraction would one day be a detriment. When he began to grow old he would look far older than he was on account of his white hair. He took off his hat with one hand and with the other pulled off his scalp and an overlay of white hair, displaying a head of short, thick blond hair beneath.

"A wig?" I exclaimed.
"A wig," he replied. "After leaving America, in consequence of fever, my hair began to come out, and before reaching Naples it was nearly all gone. The only wig I could get on the ship was this one, and since knowing you and being with you constantly I have not liked to change it."

Stupid that I should have been caught by a wig, isn't it?

Auto-Hallucination.

Answering the question "Will you please explain how a person is lifted by four persons placing their index fingers under his shoulders and legs by means of slight lifting force at time of inhaling a long breath by each person and by the person about to be lifted?" Edgar Lucien Larkin in the New York American says:

"I have been asked this question many times. If a person actually has been lifted and those doing the lifting think that the 'law of gravity is partially suspended' then the lifters are under self hallucination or auto suggestion in so far as their impression of lifting is concerned. They actually lift far more than they think, but they will not admit this, as they are partially self hallucinated in the belief that the body of the person will rise. And if they really succeed in lifting the man two inches they think it a foot. Auto hallucination is a remarkable mental phenomenon and is now being studied by mentalists here and in Europe with minute care and research."

Foolishness of Betting.

Being firmly convinced that a certain contest would terminate in conformity with his opinions, a farmer in New York state wagered his new automobile against a wheelbarrow on the result of the contest in question—and lost. Giving up the property, he grimly trudged seven miles to his home. Probably his family noticed that he had a grumpy tone. Considered in the calm, clear, cold light of pure reason, the gentleman succeeded in proving himself a near relative to a California cad—otherwise known as a donkey. Had he won the bet the result would have been pretty much the same, for betting is not argument, evidence or proof of anything. It adds no force, power or dignity to any opinion or set of opinions. It is merely the outpouring of the gambling spirit, and that is a spirit that has led many a man to utter beggary who might have adorned a home and ornamented a community.—Detroit Free Press.

Courtier and Poet.

Louis XIV., having shown Boileau some verses of his own composition, demanded his candid opinion about them.
"Sire," answered the poet, "your majesty wished to write poor lines and you did it so well that you proved that nothing is impossible to your majesty."

Changes.

"You will admit a wise man sometimes changes his mind?"
"Yes," replied Senator Sorghum. "He also changes his wardrobe. But in doing so he avoids popular attention as much as possible."—Washington Star.

Storms of Life.

As storm following storm and wave succeeding wave, the additional hardness to the shell that incloses the pearl, so do the storms and waves of life add force to the character of man.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional treatment. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed, you have a rumbling sound or impaired hearing, and when it is fully closed, deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and the tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; also cases of tinnitus are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surface.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for name of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circular, free.
