Modern Fairy Tale

The Fairies Always Bring Things Out Right

The snow lay nine feet deep on the ground.

There was an old woman who lived in the midst of a vast forest. She was wretchedly poor.

We find tals poor old woman crouched over a dying fire and listening to the monns of the winter gale and saying to berself:

"May heaven help me this day!" Finally she rose up and hobbled forth to hunt for a stick of fuel. A banker with a big loan out at 17 per cent would have wept to see that After incredible hardships and sufferings the old woman found herself possessed of a single stick. It was about large enough to brain a grasshopper with, but she was plowing her way back with it when a harsh voice called to her.

"Thiefess, drop that wood!"

"Sir, I am no thicfess," replied the old woman as she drew herself up with dignity. "I have been out searching the fields for a little wood to keep me from freezing and have found only a

It is not too late in the day to say that the name of the man was Fitzhue Carlton and that he was young and wealthy. He belonged to five clubs and owned seven autos. He was also more or less engaged to four different girls. He had given to the heathen and to the hookworm cure and was rated as a young man of great charity. and yet here he was refusing a poor old woman a fagot dug from the snow! She could not realize it and stood gazing at him with the fagot hugged to her breast, when he said: "Oh, you won't, eh! We'll see about

And he whistled for his seven buildogs, and when they came he pointed to her and shouted, "Stubby!" and the seven plied on to her in the greatest harmony and abandon. Her cries rent the air, but he whistled "Yankee Doodle" and turned and walked away.

It was a shocking thing to do. Even the crowd cried out against it. The dogs did not quite finish the old Woman. There was a small piece of her left, and it erawled to her igfoo and meaned and wept and cried out: "Must I perish here? Is there no hu-

The effect of the meal, with a small bottle after it, was to make the diner sleepy, and she gave way to it. Two hours later she awoke to find that she was no longer grandma-no longer a freezing, starving old woman. On the contrary, about forty years' worth of gray hair and wrinkles had been peeled of, and her figure was that of a sylph. No one ever saw a sylph, but we all know what a boss figure one has. She had on a skin tight skirt, and as she walked, or tried to walk, she had a galt between that of a camel and a turkey trot. Her blond hair was done up in the latest style, she had on satin slippers, and she had a beautiful pucker to her mouth.

NOTHING LIKE CHEEK

By EVERETT P. CLARKE

When I began business at eighteen years of age I entered the counting room of Stoughton Bros, on a salary of $4 a week. I had assurance enough for ten men of my age, and it is assurance that tells. I have often wondered why this is so largely the case and have come to the conclusion that it is based on the principle of war that the assailant has the advantage of force over inertia. It is a principle of mechanics that a body started through space in which there is no resisting medium will go on at the same rate forever. A body that is not started will not nove, and when struck will be knocked into "pi."

I had no reverence for my superiors. but treated them with eminent respect except when they undertook to browbeat me, when I jumped on them with both feet. This I kept up as long as I was paid little or nothing for my serv ices; when I felt it essential to retain my position I didn't take so many

There was a banker in the street by the name of Ogden. He did an enormous business and was very rich. To us clerks he was like the mogul of Tartary to a washee-washee Chinaman. Not that he put on any airs, but because his position was so lofty. I used to hear stories about how he got his start and learned that he went into the cotton market one day $50,000 in debt and in a few months was $300,000 to the good. At the time I entered business he was worth millions.

Belonging to an excellent family and not being troubled with backwardness. I was a butterfly of fashion. My capital was one dress suit, which, notwithstanding my youth, was too small for me, but for 50 cents I got a tailor to enlarge it. At functions I used to meet men who were the heads of large business concerns, as well as of fami-Some of them I occasionally went to during business hours on business, with my hat in my hand. But. meeting them socially, I considered that while we were on a different basis it behooved me to keep up an outward show of deference.

Time passed, and my salary, though slightly enlarged, was far too small for my requirements. The elbows of my dress coat were getting ragged. and it was impossible for any tailor to blde their nakedness. I did fairly good work myself in that respect with ink. Some of my fellow clerks got small raises by being obsequious to those above them, but I kept on in the even tenor of my way-that is, being ordinarily respectful and standing up for my rights. It didn't occur to me that it would pay me to toady to a man for the purpose of getting an additional two or three dollars a week.

One spring we had a heavy snowstorm, followed by a freeze and then a deluge of rain. There's no worse There is, grandma, dead loads of meteorological combination for transit?" exclaimed a cheerful voice, and portation than this, and the city was the frozen and dog bitten woman raised | well nigh impassable. It was my part as an understrapper to make way for the great

But my dislike for making way for those above me deterred me. I would have been willing to do so for an equal and would have been pleased to do so for an inferior, but to get out of a wealthy man's path by going back or stepping into two feet of water did not please me. Mr. Ogden was thinking of some great business problem, I suppose, for he didn't look up till we met very near the middle of the street. On seeing me he stopped. One of us must give way. Which should it be?

Love Song of a Bird.

"Just before an April dawn," says W. P. Pycraft in "The Courtship of Animals," "the cock capercailzie proclaims its love fever from a tree in a strange, unmusical serenade.

"With outstretched neck, drooping wings and spreading tall he gives forth a weird, uncouth kind of song, January, 1914. more or less divisible into three parts. He begins with a series of notes which remind one of nothing so much as the sound made by two sticks knocked together at intervals of ten to fifteen seconds, getting quicker and quicker and changing in key till at last they become bell-like. Then follows a se ries of sounds like the drawing of a cork out of a bottle, and these end with birdlike twitterings. By this time, however, the singer has worked himself up to an ecstasy of fervor so intense as to deaden him to all that may be passing in the outer world."

Father Hubbard.

The nursery knows nothing of Father Hubbard, but in 1604 Thomas Middleton published "Father Hubbard's Tale of the Ant and the Night-In the introduction he explains: "Why I call these Fathet Hubburd's tales is not to have them called in again as the Tale of Mother Hubburd. The world would show little judgment in that, i'faith, and I should say then, 'plena stultorum omnia,' for I entreat here neither of rugged bears nor apes, no. nor the lamentable downfall of the old wife's platters. I deal with no such metal." Since Spensor's "Mother Hubberd' does not seem to have been called in and says nothing about bears or platters. Middleton is evidently alluding to some other "Mother Hubburd."-London Standard.

Ibsen and Love.

Tennyson says that it is better to respect to the conditions he saw immediately around him-that it is better, if youthfully, romantically in love, to separate rather than to marry.
