London, May 5.—Foreign Secretary Grey was invited by Sir John David Ross, minister in the House of Commons, today to ask the American Government to abandon its position that the removal of General Huerta is of greater moment than the restoration of peace and the protection of life and industry in Mexico.

The Foreign Secretary declined, declaring that in view of the fact the mediation has been undertaken by Argentina, Brazil and Chile, it could serve no useful purpose for the British Government to make separate proposals on its own account to either Washington or Mexico.

INDUSTRIAL REVIEW

Manufacturing Enterprises and Improvements Providing Payrolls and Promoting Development of Oregon

(Prepared by the State Bureau of Industries and Statistics.)

During the past week two decisions have been rendered affecting industries. A federal court at Portland upheld the Oregon Blue Sky law, and the Supreme Court upheld the second suit brought by a working girl against the Minimum Wage law. Both will now be taken to the Supreme Court of the United States.

It is proposed to utilize the wire grass that grows on Youngs Bay near Astoria for manufacture of paper.

This week the manufacturers of Lane county will hold an exhibit of their products to encourage home industries.

The Dalles has bought 140 acres on the river front to give free sites for factories.

The Supreme court has upheld the $200,000 bond issue of Grants Pass for the purpose of building a section of railroad to the Coast.

To relieve unemployed, a bill has been initiated to tax all estates of $50,000 or ten per cent for a fund to be expended by a department of public works.

A special vessel has been chartered to carry 48 great Oregon logs to the Panama Exposition for columns for the Oregon building.

The Toledo co-operative creamery is now in operation.

The Oregon Railroad Commission is examining the books and accounts of about fifty public utility corporations to ascertain their physical value and earnings.

Mahoe county Pomona grange went on record as opposed to taxing mortgages, as tending to raise interest and keep capital out of Oregon.

Astoria has appointed an industrial commissioner to promote factories in the person of O. W. Taylor.

Molalla raised a bonus of $2000 for a pottery plant that is being erected and will soon be in operation.

A factory for the manufacture of lead pipe has been established at Portland, capable of making five thousand miles a year.

Gresham fruit growers are moving to establish a cannery.

It was stated at the Portland Rotary club that one with a fair reputation and a good pair of lungs could put over almost any kind of a freak man here in Oregon.

J. E. Toufflet, a Portland architect, submitted a plan for using fire proofed wood building material for school houses at a saving of nearly fifty percent over brick or stone.

Astoria has asked bids for the first unit of public docks to unite rail and water transportation.

Mayor Simpson of North Bend has conducted an exhaustive investigation to ascertain the best paving material and decides in favor of vitrified brick or bitulthite.

There are some very good homesteads now open for settlement in eastern Oregon. Good rich soil, some timber and does not require irrigation. Write York B. Conway, Portland, Oregon.

Three years a U. S. Surveyor and timberman. Send $1.50 for large map and full instructions and information by which you can locate yourself on an exceptionally good free homestead near small town and railroad.

Set Right

By RYLAND BELL

Last summer I made a motorcycle trip, stopping nights at farmhouses. One night I stopped with a bachelor who did his own housework. I noticed that he washed the dishes by turning a hose attached to the pump on them. I asked him if he didn't think a better way would be as the women do it—in a dishpan, with hot water and a little mop.

"Stranger," he said, "there isn't any way a woman does a thing that can't be improved on by a man. What's the use of going to the trouble of heating water and doing the mop work when you kin do it this way?"

"You evidently are not an admirer of women."

"Reckon if you'd been treated by 'em as I've been you wouldn't admire 'em neither."

"What have they done to you?"

"Oh, that's only one on 'em ez I got anything agin, but they're all alike. You can't trust 'em nollow."

"Well, now we've got it narrowed down to one, how has she offended?"

By this time he had washed the dishes and we sat down together on the front porch, and he told me the story.

"Down the road a spell is the skule-house where I went to git 'farnin' when I was a leetle boy. One of the gals lived up this way, and she and I used to come along home together. Her name was Alice Starkweather. She was mighty purty, and when we were goin' to skule together she wore her hair in one big rope down her back, and it reached purty nigh to her ankles. Alice, she silled up to me like a kitten to a warm brick. I wa'n't much of a boy for gals, but somehow Alice wouldn't let me alone. Ef I treated her kind a rough her eyes would git wet, and she'd look as if somepin awful had happened to her."

"Bimeby when Alice got to be about seventeen year old she was sent to boardin' school. I jest stayed yere and begun work on the farm. My father was gittin' old, and he needed me. I wanted to go on 'farnin', but I couldn't. I argy'd that when Alice come home from boardin' school she'd have a lot of hifalutin notions about her and she wouldn't look at me."

"So when she did come I didn't go near her. I met her one day on the road to the postoffice. She looked at me kind o' queer and axed me why I hadn't been to see her. I knowed she didn't care nothin' about me no more, she havin' been to boardin' school and I havin' stopped 'farnin' and gone to work, so I says kind o' keener less, 'You see, that's lots to do on the farm this time o' year, and I hain't got time to go callin'."

"She walked on without sayin' any thing more. You see, I was right. If she hadn't got uppish and considered me not good enough for her she'd done the way she used to do when she was a leetle gal; she'd a tried to bring me round."

"How old did you say she was at this time?"

"Goin' on eighteen."

"Well, go on with your story."

"Alice didn't go back to school no more. Her mother died that summer and Alice had to take keef of her father and do the housework. Every time she met me she'd put on some more of them airs she'd got at boardin' school, till after awhile she scarcely spoke to me at all. It only showed I was right about it in the beginnin', and I was glad I hadn't made a fool o' myself when she first come home by lettin' on I expected it would be the same between us as when she went away. If she'd stayed right yere and not gone away to git a lot o' hifalutin notions into her head like enough she'd been livin' with me now. But that's the trouble with women; they stop over so easy."

He had finished his story, and it was evident that the rupture was as hard to bear now as it had ever been. He was smoking a clay pipe, and the rapidity of the puffs showed the state of his feelings.

"My friend," I said, "don't you think it would have been wiser in you when your sweetheart first come home from boardin' school to permit her to show her feelings toward you instead of assuming that she had changed?"

"But she had changed, or she'd have tried to get me to treat her affection ate-like, same as she used to."

"She was changed, but not in that way. She had passed from child to woman."

"What's that got to do with it?"

"Everything. You indicated that you had changed to her, and now that she had become a woman, she was too proud to win you back by the same methods as when you were children."

"By gosh, stranger, I never thought o' that."

"What you should have done when she came back from boardin' school was to let her show whether she had changed toward you instead of giving her the impression that you had changed toward her."

"Well, now, that does sound kind o' sensible, doesn't it? What d'y'e think I'd better do?"

"Go and tell her that you've made a donkey of yourself."

Without a word he seized his hat and strode away, making some four feet at each step. About 10 o'clock he came in a-tin as if he had been drinkin' champagne. A great load had been lifted off his mind and a great happiness had come to him.

Work of the Inventors.

Manufacturers are almost daily in receipt of communications from inventors inclosing patent specifications covering an invention aimed to improve their product. It is a mistake on the part of manufacturers to view such inventors as impostors. The position that "an outsider cannot know more about our own business than ourselves" is a fallacy that has no place in modern industrial management. If it were necessary to prove that such a position is a fallacy thousands of inventions could be cited whereby improvements, many revolutionary, in industrial processes and products were first conceived in the minds of men not even remotely connected with the industries most vitally affected and benefited thereby.—American Machinist.

In the Balance.

"Give me two seats in the balance," said a man, stepping up to the box of the ticket seller.

"In the what?" asked the ticket seller, fearing that she had misunderstood.

"I said I wanted two seats in the balance," said the man.

The ticket seller racked her brain, trying to solve the puzzle, and, finally giving it up, she asked the man to explain just what he wanted.

"On this sign out here it says balance 25 cents for the first three rows. It says, balance 15 cents. I want two in the balance."

Then the ticket seller understood.—Exchange.
