A Fisherman's Story

By MARCIA BEVERAGE

"Gals is gals," said the old fisherman as he went on mending his nets, "whether they're poor fisher folk sich as we have here the year round or highflyers from the city. You never can tell what one of 'em's goin' to do. It seems sometimes as if there was a wireless telegraph apparatus that sends a spark from a man's eye into one on 'em when he looks at her, and she drops like a skeeter into a plate o' coal oil.

"Now, there was Miss Markham, who come here first seven years ago, as purty a little thing as a bran new schooner yacht. She wasn't more'n seventeen years old and wore the neatest dresses of any gal on the island. You'd ought to seen her swim! She didn't tie up her hair in a lump on the top of her head when she went into the water, but let it trail behind her like a mermaid. Never in my long life did I see anything so likely as Josephine Markham puilin' herself along on her side in water so clear that you could see the whole of her, the sun shinin' on her and the ripples she made and sparklin' at the same time from a jewel she wore on one of her fingers.

"I had nothin' to do then, waitin' for my boat to come out o' drydock, and used to go down to the beach on purpose to see her in the water. Sometimes she'd go in right about here with the other bathers, and sometimes she'd go out yonder on to the end of the dock and take a header. But wherever she paddled she attracted a crowd. One day while I was watchin' her swim off from the beach I saw her lookin' up at the dock at somebody and followed the direction of her eyes with mine. A young feller was standin' alone up there, and I knowed it was him that was attractin' her. He was purty enough, but, laws, there wasn't no stuff in him—pale little chap with big eyes. They was bigger than usual when he watched Miss Markham kind o' wistful, like as though he wished he was swimmin' beside her.

"Every morning after that the little beggar would stand on the dock watchin' for the gal to go in. One day I called up to him, 'Hain't you goin' in, sir?' And he said, 'No.' And I said, 'Never learned to swim?' and he said awful melancholy like, 'Yes, I know how, but I can't.'

"Well, one mornin' when Miss Markham was a-steppin' into the water with her dainty little feet, sort o' shrinkin' 'cause the ocean was cold—it wasn't more than 60 degrees—a lot o' boys was a-skylarkin' on the dock, and one on 'em, tryin' to dodge another, pushed the little chap off into twenty feet o' water. You'd ought to seen the gal skip the breakers and, after gettin' beyond 'em, go for him. The bathin' master didn't happen to be about. I s'pect the water was so cold he didn't look for bathers. So I run the lifeboat down in order to help, launched it and rowed out to the scene o' the accident.

"When I got there I saw the consarnedest sight I ever clapped eyes on. There was Miss Markham strugglin' with a pair o' legs. The little chap's head was down in the water, while the lower part of him was afloat. The gal couldn't do nothin' with him. Once she succeeded in gittin' his head above the surface, but his legs wouldn't go down, and that spoiled the game. She cast a pitiful look at me. I was hurryin' to pull up beside her, and as soon as I came into position I catched a hold of an ankle and pulled the drownin' man out, his head comin' up last, and got him into the boat. Then I helped the gal in and, takin' the oars, pulled for the beach.

"Them two creatures hadn't never spoken a word to each other, and yet she hung over him as if she'd growed up with him. As soon as I got him ashore I set about bringin' him back to life, for he was unconscious, and, callin' for a barrel, put him on it and rolled him to git the water out of him. What do you think happened? Fust one of his legs come off and then the other one.

"'He's failin' to pieces!' screamed a woman who was lookin' on, scared out o' her wits.

"'Poor feller!' said another. 'Did a shark bite 'em off?'

"'Yes,' a man in the crowd answered. 'They was hangin' by the skin.'

"Jist then a man come up who said he was a doctor. He picked up one o' the legs and throwed it down, then picked up the other and throwed that down.

"'Cork,' he said.

"The little chap opened his eyes and looked about for somethin'. When he saw the gal he looked relieved and closed 'em ag'in. We carried him to his hotel, and he was soon all right ag'in.

"What I'm gittin' at is the quarness o' gals. I found out afterward that Miss Markham married the little feller she'd saved from drownin'. That's the way they always do in romances, but in romances the heroes have legs. This chap hadn't any; they'd been shot off in the Spanish-American war.

"The gal—she's Mrs. Major Spinner now—comes here still every summer with her husband, and she seems as fond of him as if half of him wasn't cork, but real flesh and blood, like the other half. But laws, I never kin help larfin' when I think of his legs floatin' the wrong end of him.

"And think of a half cork man gittin' sich a purty gal!"
