Photographing Self at Distance

A curious method of photographing oneself when at quite a distance from the camera is proposed by M. Morisot. Take a wood spring clothespin and shape out one end so that it grasps the bulb of the shutter and the spring tends to press on the bulb. Then the other ends are brought together so as to release the bulb, and are tied with string or thread. On this is put a piece of fuse of some length. Light the fuse, the person goes to the distant point before the camera, and when the string is burned the clothespin presses the bulb and makes the exposure.—Ex.

Systematic Birds.

"Doubtless," said the professor of natural history to the returned traveler, "you have picked up many strange bits of information regarding the animals and birds of the countries you have visited."
"A few," answered the traveler. "The most interesting thing I ever heard, however, was a story I got in Africa. It seems, that a year or so ago a representative of a rubber stamping house went through there and took his sample case, containing all kinds of office stamping apparatus. It appears that some ostriches found his sample case, broke it open and swallowed the samples."
"I see nothing odd about that. Ostriches will eat anything."
"Yes, but now every ostrich egg that is found there is seen to be numbered and dated!"—London Trib.

The Charm of It.

Heaven! Charlie dear, I don't see why you should like me so much better because I'm handsome. Charlie! Why, darling, every time I kiss you it's like kissing another girl!—London Telegraph

The manly part is to do with might and main what you can do.—Emerson.

Notes of an Author.

I remember that Frank kept a black notebook in his inside coat pocket, in which he set down a heterogeneous collection of notes of his own observations—a well turned sentence, a good name, the possible title of a book. One of these entries, I remember, read: "The hands of the village clock closed like a pair of shears and cut the night in twain."

This book was his greatest treasure. Years afterward he told me that keeping it taught him the difference between seeing life subjectively and objectively. No one, he believed, could become a writer until he could regard life and people and the world in general from the objective point of view, until he could remain detached, outside, maintain the unswerving attitude of the observer. I read part of his notebook once and got soundly kicked for my impertinence, but years afterward I came upon many of these same notes in his work, amplified and adapted.—From a Sketch of Frank Norris by His Brother, Charles Norris.

Signs of Ancient Paris.

George Cain, curator of the Carnavalet museum, in Paris, treasure house of Parisian antiquities, has arranged an exhibition of old signs rescued from under the pick of the demolisher.

Some are examples of exquisite iron work. Others are delightfully quaint, such as the sign of the old Latin quarter barber, which announces that he "works quickly and silently." Following the name of a herbalist in the same old world district is the request that he be not mistaken "for the other impostor living across the street."

A Belleville store proclaimed itself "a raw and cooled park butcher." Among signs intentionally facetious is that of a little cafe which stood opposite the gate of a Parisian cemetery announcing to passers by that they would be "more comfortable here than across the street."—Chicago Tribune.

Nightingales as Pets.

Although in nature the song of the nightingale does not extend later than the middle of June, yet in captivity the bird will sing up to the time of the autumn molt and will begin again at Christmas. The one detraction from the merits of the nightingale as a pet bird is its individuality. Some birds will sing only when no one is in the room with them, some will sing under any condition, and some will be silent for ever if they change ownership. At the earnest solicitation of a friend I once parted with a nightingale which was the finest singer I had ever heard, and in its new ownership, although it was kept in the same cage and was fed in exactly the same manner as that to which it had been accustomed, it never uttered a note during the remaining seven years of its life.—London Graphic.

New Year Calls in China.

New Year calls are the custom in China, and you have to pay them in festive attire of silk or satin.

These fine clothes says Archdeacon Moule in "The Chinese People" can be hired, the price being gradually lowered as the hours of the first six days pass by. We complained once of the very late arrival of a caller, who should have been among the first to salute us. He replied that money was scarce and he was obliged to wait for the cheapest day to secure a fine robe already donned and doffed by a dozen of others. During these ceremonial days the whole community seems to give itself over to indiscriminate gambling, a practice illegal and condemned both by Chinese law and standards of morality, but winked at during this season.

The First Airship.

If we can believe certain ancient historians Nereus was the owner of the first airship. The chroniclers say it was received as a gift from his courtiers and consisted of a winged throne, to which were harnessed four tame eagles. Food held above the hungry birds was the incentive of the motive power and it is said, their struggles to appease their appetites resulted in raising the throne from the ground.

Justified.

"Superstitious after all these years! Don't you remember on the evening we first met how a black cat ran across our path and you swore some misfortune would happen to you?"
"And it wasn't a year until we were married! What greater proof do you want?"—Houston Post.

Not a Joking Matter.

"My dear," said Mrs. Henpeck, "I'm positive that our boy is thinking seriously of matrimony."
"Well, I only hope so," returned Henpeck with unusual spirit. "I wouldn't want any boy of mine to be so unfortunate as to regard it as a joke."

That's Different.

His Wife—You would not have half the nervousness you do if you would give up smoking. Himself—Oh, I couldn't live without my pipe. His Wife—Yes, you could. You told Millie Perry you could not live without her before you met me.

Inhuman Monster.

Madge—He broke her heart, the wretch! Marie—Did he hit her? Madge—No; he insisted on her keeping her engagement when she had a better offer.—Boston Transcript.

Alcohol For Poison Ivy.

An eminent New York surgeon says that the best treatment for the inflammation caused by poison ivy is to wash the place and then bathe it in 95 per cent alcohol.
