

AS TO RACES*Ultimate Outcome of European War as Predicted

(By Goodwin's Weekly)

For a long time the Egyptians were the ruling race in the south, the Chaldeans, merging finally with the Medes and Persians, ruled the east, when the east was the center of civilization and power.

When the Persians tried to extend their scepter over Greece they met a sorry reverse, and then Greece expanded so much that the son of Philip of Macedonia took the offensive and subdued both Persia and Egypt. Then Greece became the glory of the earth, attaining to so much splendor that even to this day some of its magnificence has never been equaled.

But Greece went down under the iron tread of Roman legions and for seven hundred years Rome, from her throne of beauty ruled the world.

Then came the failure of her metal mines, partly from her vices, her arm became nerveless and the barbarians from the north swept down and over her, and for some centuries the world lay in semi-darkness, during which the Moslems, dreaming of universal empire, conquered a great portion of Asia, north Africa and a large part of southern Europe.

Then Charlemagne, with enlightened valor, restored the western empire.

Philip of Spain for a time dreamed of rivaling the glory and power that Charlemagne had won, but the fate of the great armada blasted this hope and then the power the literature and government framed after Magna Carta had been wrung from King John gave to the Anglo-Saxon a special significance on the map of the world and in the thoughts of men.

Later Russia, which had been without form and void, began to round into form.

By the war of 1870-71 the German states which had all, save Prussia, been weak and often at cross purposes were consolidated and made strong and doubtless the dream of the Kaiser has been to become a second Charlemagne.

As it looks today, the sceptre of the world is soon to be carried by the Anglo-Saxon or the Slav.

The great colonies of Great Britain are marshaling their armies and sending them to the protection of their motherhood.

Should the war become so sore that the integrity of Great Britain would really be threatened, we do not know what our government would decide to do, but there are unnumbered thousands of our countrymen who would not be restrained.

We look to see as a final termination of the war a drawing together of the western nations of Europe, including Great Britain, not at first through love but because of the common peril which will be presented by the disciplined hosts of "the bear that walks like a man."

Reasoning from the lessons of history, it is not inconsistent to imagine that for a long time there will be a continued struggle between the Anglo-Saxon and Slav for supremacy, that this will be continued until the final problem shall confront them: "Is the Caucasian or the yellow and brown races to dictate the world's fortunes?" When that struggle is over and time at last heals the heartaches and smooths the ground above the innumerable graves, it will not be strange if some seer, reading the word's tragic history will declare that it was all the Divine plan out of which should come to man the Divine light of full enlightenment, that man first wandered away from central Asia to subdue the world; that it required thousands of years to accomplish the task, but at last on the very spot where man's advancement began, where the cradle of primitive civilization was first rocked, there he, with real civilization, returned and built a new and glorified temple and dedicated it to Justice and Peace.

Smoke Shops Closed Sundays

Eugene, Or., Sept. 28.—Next Sunday, if the order County Attorney Devers is carried out, every cigar and confectionery store here will be closed. The County Attorney announced Saturday that the state law which requires this class of business to close on Sunday would hereafter be enforced, but later in the day modified his order so that it would go into effect next Sunday instead of yesterday, as the confectioners had stocks of ice cream on hand for the Sunday trade that would spoil were they compelled to close. The retailers say they will fight this order in the courts.

Seed Tested Free

Farmers who wish to get samples of their field and garden seed tested free of cost at the State Fair in Salem, should take it to the exhibit booths of the Agricultural College and hand it, properly labeled to the expert in charge. A tablespoonful of fine seeds and six tablespoonfuls of large grains, is the amount recommended. Purity tests will be given out as rapidly as made, while germination tests will be reported later from the College cooperative laboratory.

Today the political trenches in many states are filled with victims of the great primary battle.

AGED MAN SUES SONFritz Timmerman, 76, Avers he Signed Deed Believing it a Lease.

Oregon City, Sept. 30.—Fritz Timmerman, aged 76 years, has sued his son Carl, in the Circuit Court here. The old man owns a 60-acre farm near Boronia, valued at $7000 and, according to the charges made by the plaintiff, his son tried every possible plan to secure possession of the property. Fritz Timmerman is feeble. He avers his son first had him examined for his sanity, but failed. Then the son approached his parent with what he termed a lease, but after the old man signed it he claims that he found that the document was not a lease but a deed. Plaintiff prays that the land be restored to him.

Water Hemlock

Every rancher who turns his sheep and cattle and horses out to graze, needs to know something of the character of the forage which they are likely to find, especially in regard to poisonous plants.

One of these poisonous plants, Cicuty or water hemlock, is found in varying quantities over the United States. It is known under numerous names—cowbane, snakeweed, wild parsnip, snakeweed, beaver poison. It is found in Oregon and Washington, and there are cases on record where stock have been poisoned by it in these two States. Experiments have been made by several authorities to determine what part of the plant and to what extent it is poisonous, and it seems to be plain that the root and lower stem are the most dangerous parts of the plant. In some cases stock have been affected by eating the tops, while there are a few instances where the tops have caused no injury.

The Department of Agriculture has recently issued a bulletin (No. 69) which deals with this plant. While the bulletin is somewhat scientific and technical in its composition, quotes Latin and numerous learned authorities, yet it also presents in a more popular way much valuable information and advice for the stock owner in regard to the water hemlock. A copy of this bulletin may be obtained by purchase (10 cents) from the Superintendent of Public Documents, Washington, D. C., or through the local Congressman.

J. W. Copeland, of Dayton, Ohio, purchased a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy for his boy who had a cold, and before the bottle was used the boy's cold was gone. Is that not better than to pay a five dollar doctor's bill? Sold by all dealers.

TO ELIMINATE NOISEIs Aim of Vice President Scott of Southern Pacific

Sleeping cars on which sleep will no be a misnomer, and on which railroad patrons can enjoy their full quota of restful slumbers is one of the ideals of Vice-president W. Scott of the Southern Pacific company. He has just issued through the division superintendents, an appeal to all employees of the company, especially train and yard crews, asking them to increase their efforts to eliminate all unnecessary nocturnal noises and asking, furthermore, for suggestions for improvement of the service in this regard.

The railroad companies for years have been striving to do away with the clanging of bells, tooting of whistles, hissing and sputtering of locomotives and shouting of trainmen close to sleeping cars. The Southern Pacific company long ago instituted its campaign and a great many of the noises and inconveniences that used to be associated with sleepers have already been eliminated. But Vice-president Scott wants to make the service even better if possible. He wants to prove that REAL sleeping cars are within the realm of possibility everywhere on the Pacific System. Hence his appeal to the men to keep up their work and to cooperate for improvement, where possible.

PORTLAND LETTERState Immigration Commission Listing Land for Settlers.*Salem Cherrians Entertained.

Portland, Ore., Sept. 29 (Special).—During the past two weeks the Portland office of the Oregon State Immigration Commission has had a half-dozen men in the field listing farm lands for the benefit of prospective settlers, securing accurate legal descriptions, noting the physical character of the land and making a note of the prices at which owners are willing to sell.

These listings demonstrate that there is available at the present time plenty of good, productive farm land at reasonable prices in nearly all sections of the state.

PIONEERS' RE-UNIONGreat Gathering of Old Settlers Their Descendants And Friends, Held in This City Thursday.

The annual re-union of the "pioneers of Southern Oregon" was held in this city Thursday and although the date for the gathering had been changed on account of the Shriners' doings at Ashland, last week there was still a very good attendance.

The program, consisting of prayer by Rev. Bandy, address by Rev. Weston F. Shields, obituaries of departed pioneers, music, etc. was rendered at the court house and was received with marked attention by those in attendance.

Just at the close of the exercises a committee of young ladies appeared and announced that "dinner" was ready, whereupon the pioneers, their families and invited guests marched to the I. O. O. F. hall, in the dining room of which a bountiful banquet was served by the Native Daughters and to say that the banquet was enjoyed by the pioneers and their friends would be putting it rather mildly indeed. After the banquet the visitors spent the remainder of the day in social converse and in looking over old time scenes.

WILL GET MONEYState Highway Commission Decides to Give it $60,000 From Road Fund

Salem, Or., Sept. 30.—Sixty thousand dollars will be the sum apportioned to Jackson County from the state highway fund, according to tentative arrangements made by the State Highway Commission.

This county was one of the first in the state to bond itself this year for road building and it had expected to obtain approximately $70,000. Expenditures made on the Biggs highway made such a sum impossible however, it is said. Thirty thousand was expended on this road and the highway engineer had planned to expend another $5000 but commission now intends to make this a part of the apportionment to Jackson County. Early in the year the commission adopted the policy of giving aid to such counties as would build permanent highways.
