An Atlantic Episode

by CHARLES LEWIS PHIPPS

I confess that in going about my chief pleasure is watching other persons.

Coming over the Atlantic ocean to America on a liner I picked out a mother and daughter as worthy of my attention. A young man had been introduced to the daughter, who seemed to be very well pleased with him. The mother was also well pleased that the daughter was well pleased. The young man was well pleased too. What struck my delicate perceptive faculties was that the mother's pleasure in the matter seemed to arise from a sense of relief. How or why I inferred this I can't explain. A woman would understand it without an explanation. As for a man, you couldn't stick it into him with a hatpin.

These two young things were getting on like two mating turtle doves when one day, the girl being on deck, I saw her go to the stern of the ship. The weather was bad, and I was the only other woman on deck. I scudded along after the girl on the other side of the smokestack and deck-houses till she reached the limit to the first class part of the ship and she stood looking out on to the second class part. A young man appeared. He saw the girl, but he didn't see me, for I was crouching under a lifeboat. He threw a kiss to the girl, who, after looking around to see that she was not observed, returned it in kind.

Now, wasn't that interesting? Of course it wouldn't have been half so interesting if it hadn't been for the other young man the girl had met on the voyage. She was fooling her mother with him. The real lover, whom the mother condemned, was traveling second class so that it wouldn't be known to the girl's mamma that he was on the ship.

Now, what was the upshot of all this? In order to keep track of it I must be up and doing. I mustn't let the slightest incident escape me.

And I didn't.

A couple of days after this, when it was stormy, I remembering that lovers lose just such weather to send kisses, went on deck early and stayed all day, having a steward bring up my lunch. About dusk the girl came up, and I knew by her looks that something was up. She didn't know it, but out of the corner of my eye I saw her scowl at me. I was the only woman on deck. She didn't care for the men. She could fool them, but she couldn't fool me.

That girl scudded along to the after part of the ship without any one seeing her except me, and just as the darkness was settling down she was lost to view.

In about an hour from that time there was the biggest racket aboard that ship you ever saw. The girl had disappeared, and her mother was wild about her. One or two of the men who were on deck when she came up reported having seen her, but none of them saw the last of her. But her mother abused them so frightfully for not keeping an eye on her, especially as the ship was rolling badly, that after a while one of the sailors said: "Missus, we didn't want to hurt yer feelin's. The truth is I saw the young lady skiddin' along till she struck the port rail about midship, and afore I could get my hands on her she toppled over."

This, if it had not been for the distress it gave the poor mother, would have been amusing. I was bound I wouldn't give the girl away, and yet I couldn't bear to see the mother suffer. We were to reach port the next morning, and somehow I doubted if the mother believed her daughter had gone overboard. The latter knew mighty well that she was trying to keep her part from a young man, and I don't doubt that it was the probability she was somewhere on the ship. She had a thorough search made of the first class portion and a perfunctory search made of the second class, but none of the staterooms.

I didn't know and I don't know now how the lovers managed it, but I know what I would have done had I been one of them. I would have gone, at least temporarily, from the second class cabin to the stateroom and remained there till the fuss blew over. They could easily have got some emigrant clothes and, besides, could have lodged any one looking for them.

The next day nothing was said about the girl who was seen to plunge into the ocean. The passengers were busy getting ready to go ashore, and perhaps they hadn't time to concern themselves about a person they didn't even know personally. Seeing a group of three persons standing together waiting to go down the gangplank I approached them. They were the mother and daughter and a young man who bore a strong resemblance to the second class passenger who had been throwing kisses during the voyage. The mother looked sour enough to bite off a nail. The daughter looked lit at ease, but the young man seemed to be quite proud of himself.

The only way I could find out about what had taken place was to remain aboard till after the passengers had gone ashore and interview some of the officers. This I did and learned that the girl having joined her lover in the second class part of the ship was married there and returned to her old abode with her husband. It was agreed by all that since the ship would soon reach port the matter need not be explained.

Memoirs of Napoleon

In Three Volumes

This man caused the last general European war.

His personal memoirs, written by his secretary, Baron De Meneval, are full of the most absorbing incidents, especially in view of the present great European struggle.

Just a hundred years ago, his ambitions bathed the Continent in a sea of blood. France alone, under his leadership, fought Germany, Russia, Austria, Italy, and Great Britain—and won.

Get these Memoirs Free

By special arrangement with the publishers of COLLIER'S, The National Weekly, we are enabled to offer a limited number of these three-volume sets of the Memoirs of Napoleon free with a year's subscription to Collier's and this paper. The offer is strictly limited—to get advantage of it you must act promptly.

Sherlock Holmes Stories Exclusively in Collier's

All the Sherlock Holmes stories published in 1915 will be printed exclusively in Collier's. The "Last-minute" pictures of the European War will appear every week in the photographic section of Collier's.
