A Mysterious Disappearance Solved

By WILLIAM CHANDLER

Some workmen tearing down a building in Paris, on reducing the level of compartment, closet or something of the kind about big enough for one to stand in upright, came upon a human head. There was hair on it, but not much. It was more than a skull, yet not exactly a head. As the men went Salem, Or., Oct. 7-Thirty-five stu- on lowering the walls they revealed a dents are taking the bar examination | female figure in the clothing of a man, which crumbled as they proceeded downward.

The figure faced an iron door behind wainscoating. A panel was made, or, rather, had been made, to slide sideward, and the door behind it opened inward, leaving sufficient room for the figure to get into the closet and shut the door. There was a latch on the outside. The panel had originally been moved by weights and locked with a secret spring. But both door and panel had been walled up a long while before, and their existence had become unknown.

The master workman sent word of the find to the owner of the building, asking for instructions as to what to do in the matter. The owner came, accompanied by a gentleman wearing the button of the Legion of Honor, and the latter examined both the body and its near carefully. He was a fessional antiquarian. He advised that the body be buried and began a search for the reason of its having occupied for so long the position in which it was found.
