This will be a great convenience to autoists and will be much safer than the usual habit of keeping gasoline in stock with other goods. Judge Calkins of the circuit court, who had taken the motion for a new trial in the Canton case under advisement, has made an order denying the motion. This will end the matter here unless it should be remanded by the supreme court to which it is said that an appeal will be taken. The motion of W. J. Canton for a new trial was argued in the circuit court Monday forenoon. The defendant and his attorney, Mr. Mulkey each made an argument in support of the motion and Prosecuting Attorney Kelley made one against it. The matter was taken under advisement by the court. The regular price of the Portland Daily Telegram is $5.00 per year, but we have made arrangements by which we can furnish both the Telegram and the Jacksonville Post for one year for $4.50 cash, which is half a dollar less than the regular price of the Telegram alone. Better get busy as this offer will be withdrawn Dec. 31. W. P. Bailey a wellknown resident of this city and former proprietor of the Union Livery Stables, was severely kicked by a horse which he was attempting to harness early Monday morning. The ironshod hoof of the horse struck Mr. Bailey just over the right eye, knocking him down and rendering him unconscious; he was removed to his home and after a cursory examination by Dr. Gollen, was taken to the hospital at Medford where a further examination revealed a compound fracture of the skull. An operation was performed and the injured parts dressed and bandaged. At last reports the injured man is resting easily and strong hopes are entertained of his ultimate recovery.

Shingle Mill Starts

Kelso, Wash., Nov. 19.—The McLane Lumber & Shingle Mill recently shut down for repairs, has resumed work with a small crew, as few men union sawyers and packers are immediately available. Sawyers and packers of the old crew all union men struck against a decrease in the price paid for shingles of 2 cents a thousand. The plant was picketed for several days by union men but Manager McLane secured a sufficient crew yesterday to start work. He expects to increase his crew until he has 450 men.

A SOLDIER'S VISION

By M. QUAD Copyright, 1914, by Associated Literary Press

For a period of three weeks along the front of our brigade a picket had been murdered on his post every night. The front was a mile long, with the posts within ten rods of each other, and a bushwacker had crept up on the lone picket with all the craft of an Apache and stabbed him to death. The one assassin had killed twenty-two men before any great stir was made about it. All that was done when the matter was finally taken hold of was to put two, three and four men on a post in place of one and to send out small parties to look for a needle in a haystack, as it were. That all these murders had been committed by one single hand no one doubted. A knife had been used in every instance. On the night that the order was issued to double the men on the posts I was ill in my tent with a sore throat and fever. My tent mates were on guard or detail, and I realized that I was light headed. I could not fall into a sound sleep, but I dozed at intervals, and the noises of the camp were confused with queer dreams. Of a sudden this confusion cleared away, and I had what you call either a dream or a vision. I saw a man in the uniform of a Federal captain, mounted on a dark bay horse, ride up to a farmhouse. The face and form of rider and horse were as plain to me as if I had seen them in my normal state of health at noonday. The captain was a man of about thirty, blue eyed, with brown hair, brown mustache and a front tooth filled with gold. At the corner of the left eye was a small scar from a wound inflicted years before. As the officer descended from the saddle and hitched his horse to the fence I saw a woman's face at the window for a moment. The same face was seen again for a moment as she opened the door for the captain. She was a tall, dark haired woman, and the face bore a smile. As suddenly as the vision came it was blotted out, but it returned again. This time the captain was mounted and it was night. It was the same house, and his horse wanted to speed too fast and was pulled in. I could not make out how I followed on, but follow I did, and we had just descended a hill and were crossing a creek by a plank bridge when there came a red flash, followed by the report of a firearm, and the captain threw up his arms and tumbled to the right and fell out of the saddle. The horse sprang to the left off the bridge, which had no rail, landed in the creek and went off among the underbrush. I saw that the officer was dragged along with his foot in the stirrup. I also saw the man who had fired the shot. He was tall and gaunt faced, with long black hair and glittering black eyes and dressed in the rough clothes of a farmer. When one of my tent mates came in I at once related the dream or vision to him, but neither of us attached any importance to it. One with a fever all ways has queer dreams and fancies. A week had gone by and I was all right again when I read in a Washington paper of the singular disappearance of a captain in our brigade. This officer, so it was stated, had left camp on a certain afternoon on his horse and had not been heard of since. My vision came back to me so clearly and I was so sure that it furnished a clue that I reported to my captain. He ridiculed the idea, but sent me to the colonel. My statements were received with a smile, but I was given a pass and a note to the brigadier general. He was a gruff old dog, and he called me a fool before I had spoken ten words. When I had given a close description of the missing officer he began to listen, and the result was that I went out with a squad to search. We passed for two miles over a road I had never set foot on before. We came to a farmhouse I had never seen in my waking moments. We found the black haired woman, and she corroborated my story of the captain's arrival. She was a widow, living with her mother, and the captain had been calling for many weeks, and it was a case of love. A horse had gnawed a fence rail, a horse had pawed up the earth; the captain's horse was a bay. When we returned to the bridge we found the marks where the bushwacker had jumped. We found where the iron shoes of the horse had scamped the stones and where he had clambered out. In the woods, a mile away, we found the horse and the rider. The captain had been shot through the body. He had been dragged by the stirrup until his body had become tangled among the underbrush. The horse had eaten every bush and limb within reach, but had been without water and was just able to stand. His rider was probably dead within five minutes after being shot. You may have made up your mind to hear that the assassin was also discovered through my dream but he was not. I have always believed that it was his hand which knifed the pickets, but it is only my belief. No one charged with any of the crimes was ever brought to book so far as I know. I could have identified the bushwacker among a thousand men, but I never had the opportunity. A week after the finding of the captain's body our brigade was marching and fighting forty miles away, and if the assassin was a farmer living in the neighborhood of his crimes he was safe from discovery.

Where There's Pain There's Life. "We have looked upon pain and suffering," said Dr. H. Cameron Gillies, a London physician, "as the greatest evil to which humanity is exposed, and indeed the living creation is exposed, and we have esteemed it a great mystery. There is, however, no mystery about pain. It is the universal language of mankind and of all living beings all the time—and indeed our great teacher. Without pain the human race would make no progress, and we should have no evolution in nature. "The people of my native highlands have an old time proverb, 'There is always peace before death,' and to this day they do not like an illness not attended with pain. They look upon it as dangerously ominous, but the moment the sufferer begins to complain they regard the case and condition as distinctly hopeful. My long experience is that this is true all the way. They have another gem, 'Where there is pain there is life'—and hope.

French Military Sentiment. During one of the wars between France and England a French officer blew up his ship to prevent its being taken. He and all the crew perished. The French government recognized the officer's heroism by entering the name of his sister, his only surviving relative, in the place in the navy list which his name had occupied, and here it remained until after her death. Napoleon Bonaparte conferred upon La Tour d'Auvergne the title of "First Grenadier of the French Army." He had declined promotion to the colonelcy of a regiment because it would separate him from his brave grenadiers, but he was not insensible to the distinction which the epithet made apparent. When he was killed in battle the emperor ordered that his name should be called at every roll call of the grenadiers and that the sergeant should answer, "Died on the field of honor."—Army and Navy Journal.
