The Czar's Letter

By WILLARD BLAKEMAN

In 1892 Napoleon III, who had a scheme in his head for his Mexican empire, was anxious to make a cat-paw of England by inducing her to join him in breaking up the American republic. The Emperor Alexander of Russia, jealous of England's growing commercial power, did not propose that she should profit by the troubles in the United States and, believing that she would not intervene without Napoleon's assistance, determined to prevent if possible the Anglo-French intervention.

"Tell your master," said Alexander to the French ambassador, "that if he interferes in America I will strike him."
Now, the emperor was not sure that Napoleon would inform the English government of this threat. He was committed in his Mexican scheme and would proceed despite the czar's protest. England once having entered the scheme could not well withdraw. Napoleon was at the time in conference with the British ambassador to France, and the alliance was about to be perfected.

One day the American minister at St. Petersburg was called to the imperial palace and when he returned to the embassy called the second secretary of legation into his private office and, handing him a paper, said to him:

"This document is a communication to me from the czar expressing his friendliness for the United States and declaring that if the Emperor Napoleon intervenes in the struggle going on there he will make war upon France. It is essential that this document be shown to the British premier with the least possible delay. St. Petersburg is full of the Emperor Napoleon's spies, and it is quite likely that these facts are known to them. There is little doubt that they will put every obstacle in your way to delay your arrival in England till after the Anglo-French alliance has been effected between the two countries. They may also try to obtain possession of the document you bear. Go to London as quickly as possible and do not sleep till you are on the channel."

George Carey, armed with a 42-caliber revolver, made his preparations to leave by the next train at 6 p. m. Expecting that he might be watched and delayed on his way to the station, he called a cab an hour before train time. He knew the shortest route and soon saw that he was being driven in another direction. Tapping on the glass window that separated him from the driver, he appeared to the latter pointing a cocked revolver at him.

"Drive straight to the station," he said.

This had the proper effect, and Carey reached the train half an hour before leaving time. This was unfortunate, for it gave those in the pay of the French emperor plenty of time to make their arrangements with regard to him.

The embassy was put by an official (believed to be a compartment where there was one) but a girl. The train had no sooner started than she began to pull a cigarette. Carey knew by its odor that it was drugged and tried to open the window. It had been secured. He at once broke the glass with the butt of his revolver.

When Carey passed the border into Germany he was very sleepy and dropped into a slumber by the side of his berth to keep awake. His suit case was in the rack, and when he awoke, after the train had stopped several times, he noticed that the case was not there. He was troubled only at the loss of toilet articles and a change of clothing for the czar's letter was under a linen band around his body.

Carey believed that the chain of spies watching him, would expect him to pass through Belgium. He therefore concluded to go through France. His bold stroke was successful, and he was not disturbed, passing even through Paris and reaching Calais without a venture. His traveling by an unexpected route threw the cordon of persons watching him completely off the track, and he was not located by them until he reached Calais.

He was leaving his train at Calais to go aboard the boat for Dover when a man stepped up to him and asked if he were George Carey. Carey, who knew very well that he was spotted, admitted that he was, but in a tone to indicate that he would break no further news. The man displayed a shield and, producing a paper, began to read a warrant for his arrest on a charge of collusion with the government.

Meanwhile the passengers were passing from the train to the boat. Carey stood listening to the warrant, one eye on the travelers and the boat, the other on the person whom he knew to be personating an officer of the law. When the last passenger had passed over the gangway the American knocked the Frenchman down and ran for the boat. It had left the dock, but Carey cleared the gap of ten feet with out difficulty.

A couple of hours on the channel and a few more in a train and Carey reached London. He had no luggage to bother him and took a cab at once for Downing street. There he got into communication with the British premier and was rejoiced to hear that the Anglo-French alliance had not yet been perfected. Producing the czar's letter, Carey went to a hotel and slept for forty-eight hours without waking.

The Potato Hoax.

Potato eating has become a habit not because potatoes contain enough nourishment to carry on life, but because they are cheap, easy to prepare and bulky enough to fill up the stomach. The potato consists almost entirely of starch, and though this has a place in the diet it is not capable of building up strength and muscle. Constant reference is made to the hard hood of colonists and early settlers. They were not raised on a potato diet, for the potato was a luxury as late as 1890, to be served with sugar, nutmeg and mace. It is a product of more recent years, part and parcel of the struggle to keep down the living expense at the cost of the body.

This does not mean that potatoes should be eliminated from the dietary, for like every other food they have a definite mission to fulfill, but they must be used with discretion and in proper combination. Excessive use brings an inevitable trail of anaemia, obesity and auto-intoxication.—Country Gentleman.

Perpetual Motion.

A discovery which seems to be the equivalent of perpetual motion was described by Professor Whithead at a meeting of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers. He declared that by subjecting a closed coil of lead wire to practically absolute zero temperature, and starting a flow of electricity therein by some external means, Professor Knudsen of Copenhagen succeeded in maintaining a continuous current without the expenditure of energy. To obtain the extremely low temperature necessary to make the experiment a success the coil was immersed in liquid helium. The current was started in the wire by magnetic induction, the flow of electricity persisting, it is declared, for four and one-half hours after the magnetic influence was removed. It was stated that if the experiment had not been terminated when it was the current would probably have continued to flow indefinitely.—Electrical World.

Anti-a of Volcanoes.

Some curious antics are performed by volcanoes in a fit of pique. On the island of Savaii, in the Samoan group of the south Pacific, a fissure opened late one day in a cocoa plantation. An eruption took place immediately, devastating the whole island. After an eruption by Mount Taal in Luzon, Philippine Islands, five lakes, all of different colors, were left in the crater. Katmai, in Alaska, spread its volcanic dust around the world in less than a month. Mount Pelee thrust a rock plug through its crater nearly 2400 feet high in a few days. The plug has since sealed until only the stump is left. Bandai-san, in Japan, blew its own head off and then belched streams of hot mud. When the Island of Krakatau, near Sumatra, was destroyed by volcanic shock the report of the explosion was heard 200 miles away. Cotacachi, in Mexico, once broke loose so suddenly that the snow on its summit was scattered over the surrounding country as blocks of ice.—Rauscher's Times.

Gigantic Gas Tank.

The biggest of the many huge gas-holders in existence is one completed in 1910 for the New York Gas Company, located at Queens, New York city. The tank is 251 feet in diameter and 275 feet high. Such is the weight of this vast cylinder that it is a familiar landmark for many miles around New York city.
