Riding in a Jinrikisha.

When the European or American tourist first lands in Japan he at once demands a jinrikisha. Having read of it and heard so much of it he wants an immediate experience of it as soon as he finds himself in the land of its birth. Almost any day one may see a procession of men and women, ashore for a day or two from a steamer in port, making their way up the crowded thoroughfares of Tokyo, sitting rather awkwardly in their jinrikishas, trembling unbalanced over the axle, not knowing whether the thing is going to tip backward or fall forward, so loosely does the puller seem to hold the shafts. The first time one gets into a jinrikisha he always feels like a baby, and this gawkish sensation coupled with that of the uncertainty of one's position in balancing it, renders the experience not quite so pleasant as anticipated. But the only way for comfort is to sit back at one's ease and leave the responsibility to the man who pulls it.—Japan Magazine.

To the Manner Born.

In "Hamlet," act 1, scene 4, occur these lines:

Ay, marry, is't.
But to my mind, though I am native here
And to the manner born, it is a custom
More honored in the breach than the observance.

Some have maintained that in this case "manner" should be spelled "manor," because the former was an old variant spelling of the latter. The phrase would then be applied to a person accustomed to the usages of a locality. But the weight of opinion favors "manner" as used, for instance, by Swinburne in the sentence, "He has not the eyes and nerves of one to the manner born." In this case the phrase refers to one having a lifelong acquaintance with given conditions and customs, regardless of whether they are associated with a single locality.—Philadelphia Press.

Source of Robinson Crusoe.

The Edinburgh Courant, long since dead, is worthy of remembrance, not only by Edinburgh and Scotland, but by the literary world at large. Its editors include Daniel Defoe, who seems to have been the first occupant of its editorial chair, to which he appears to have gone on his liberation from Newgate. "Old and New Edinburgh" mentions "the Edinburgh Courant of Oct. 16, 1707 (then edited by Daniel Defoe)," but Dr. Chalmers in his "Life of Defoe" says it is not suspected that he continued long to edify the Edinburgh citizens with his lucubrations. It was doubtless during his Edinburgh sojourn that Defoe heard all about Alexander Selkirk of Largo, the original of Robinson Crusoe.—London Chronicle.

Language of the Nose.

"Here is an article in the paper that says a woman's character can be determined by her nose."

"Well, there may be something in that, but there's a surer way. No one can make a mistake concerning a woman's character if he will look at the noses of other women who meet her. The extent to which they turn up at such times shows just what she is or isn't."—Exchange.

A Dream Joke.

Almost every one has dreamed of writing a poem, delivering a speech or making a witty remark that seemed at the time wonderfully brilliant, but that, recalled on waking, proved to be either commonplace or wholly meaningless. That is not always the case, however, as this story, which the Rev. Washington Gladden is fond of telling, proves.

"I dreamed," says Dr. Gladden, "that the old house that formerly stood near my church was still there and that old Mr. Deshler, who has been dead many years, still lived in it. I also knew that his old dog, George, who never failed to bark at me when I passed the house, still lived. In my dream I was passing the house when the door opened and the old gentleman came out, followed by George, who, as usual, rushed barking up to me.

"'Now, now, George,' said the old man, 'you ought not to do that. You know that's a friend of ours. That's Dr. Gladden.'

"'Oh, I have met George before,' I responded to the introduction. 'In fact, George and I have for some time had a bowwowing acquaintance.'"—Exchange.

In Defense of the Mule.

In what is described by Justice Henry Lamm of the supreme court of Missouri as a "celebrated case" the court handed down a decision exonerating the Missouri mule. Some years ago one Lyman sued one Dale for damages done to the plaintiff's buggy by "the aforesaid wild and unruly mule." After being considered by justices of the peace, one circuit judge, three judges of the court of appeals and four supreme court justices the mule is exonerated by Judge Lamm as follows:

"There are sporadic instances of mules behaving badly. That one that Absalom rode and 'went from under' him at a crisis in his fate, for instance. 'The mule don't kick according to no rule,' saith the American negro. His voice has been a matter of derision, and there are those who put their tongue in their cheek when speaking of it.

"However, the faithfulness, surefootedness and good sense of the mule, all matters of common knowledge, may be allowed to stand over against his faults and create a preponderance in the scale in his favor."—New York Sun.
