

While other towns are concentrating their trade at home and spending their money with home people, the people of this city are spending their money with outsiders and then complain about times being dull and that the old town is going to seed, etc. Of course a man can do as he pleases, patronize whom he wishes, but should remember that every dollar spent at home helps almost everyone in his home town while the dollar sent away seldom if ever comes back. Sometimes it is necessary to send away for something not found at home, but ordinarily everything used by the average family can be obtained from the local dealer. Home patronage should also extend to the doctor, the lawyer, the dentist, the printer, etc. Here we have as able professional men as can be found anywhere in the state and still we find persons going outside for a doctor, lawyer, or dentist and at the same time expect to receive the patronage of our home people. Think it over.

Scientific Housekeeping.

"Don't you have trouble getting a sufficient variety of food?" she asked.

"No," said the woman who runs a boarding house; "that's the easiest part of it. You see, I make up a series of menus for breakfast, dinner, etc., at the beginning of the season and then they go on steadily till the end of it. The cook knows just what to prepare each day, and I am not at all bothered."

"But don't your boarders get tired of having the same thing each week on the same day?"

"Ah," said the landlady, "that's where I find em! They don't have the same thing on the same day of the week. There are ten separate menus. If we begin, say, with hash on Monday, the next time they have hash is a week from Thursday and the next time a week from the following Sunday. Nobody can tell what he's going to have on any given day without working it out with a pencil and paper, and as nobody is likely to go to that trouble just for the sake of finding his meals monotonous, the result is, in fact, as pleasantly varied as if the menu for the day was composed every morning."—New York Post.

Prismatic Lake.

Prismatic lake in Yellowstone park, is the most perfect spring of its kind in the world. It rests on the summit of a self built mound, sloping gently in all directions. Down this slope the overflow from the spring descends in tiny rivulets, everywhere interlaced with one another. A map of the mound resembles a spider web with the spider (the spring) in the center. The pool is 250 by 300 feet in size. Over the lake hangs an ever present cloud of steam, which itself often bears a crimson tinge, reflected from the waters below. The steam unfortunately obscures the surface of the lake, and one involuntarily wishes for a rowboat in which to explore its unseen portions. Whenever visible there is a varied and wonderful play of colors, which fully justifies the name. —"The Yellowstone National Park," by Hiram Martin Chittenden, Brigadier General, U. S. A., Retired.

PLAYING A PART

By WILLIAM CHANDLER

"Mr. Kenworthy," said Mrs. Middleton when that gentleman appeared for her dinner party, "before we dine I wish to speak a word to you about the young lady I have assigned to you for a dinner companion. She has a mild form of insanity, or rather monomania. She fancies that every man she meets is in love with her, and no matter what he says she considers it a proposal of marriage. But don't be alarmed; the next day she forgets all about it."

Kenworthy assured his hostess that he would excuse the young lady for anything that might occur between them, and she left him to attend to other matters connected with her dinner party, without giving him any other information about the young lady he was to take out to dinner, not even mentioning her name.

At the last minute the sudden indisposition and regrets of an invited guest rendered a change in the arrangement of the couples necessary. When dinner was announced Kenworthy had not been presented to the lady that had been assigned him for a dinner companion. The procession had started for the dining room when a sister of the hostess hurried toward him and, leading him to a young lady sitting by herself, introduced him. He bowed, crooked his arm, and the two formed the last couple to take their seats at the table.

Among the changes made was Mr. Kenworthy's dinner companion, and in the hurry the card bearing the name of Miss Bliss, beside whom he was to have sat, had not been changed for that of Miss Steele, the lady who had been assigned him in her stead. Miss Steele glanced down at the card on taking her seat, and a strange look came over her face. Then the corners of her red lips quirked upward, and a mischievous look came into her eyes. Kenworthy, too, gave a quick glance at the name and opened conversation.

For three hours the guests regaled themselves with Mrs. Middleton's table delicacies, and Miss Steele had ample time to win Mr. Kenworthy's good opinion, to say nothing of his admiration. During the early part of the dinner he was quite troubled lest she should construe something he said into a proposal of marriage, but about the time the game was served he began to think that he wouldn't mind it much if she did. Then he became curious as to what she would consider a proposal, and lastly he began to put forth certain tests. Pretending a mistake, he took up the glass of wine before her and sipped it, remarking at the same time that it must be a different brand from what he was drinking, for it tasted far sweeter. The supposed Miss Steele dropped her eyes, but said nothing. This started a succession of delicately turned compliments on the part of Mr. Kenworthy, to all of which the lady listened with apparent emotion.

It is the nature of the small boy to see how near he can skate to an air hole in the ice without breaking in. Urged on by a similar impulse, Mr. Kenworthy proceeded to see how far he could talk "soft" to the monomaniac without making love to her. The basis of his investigations was curiosity. If he had become infatuated with her in so short a time he was not aware of it. The dinner came to an end, and on retiring from the table Miss Steele led the way to a window seat quite apart from the other guests.

"Mr. Kenworthy," she said, opening and shutting a fan she held in her hand as though struggling with some deep emotion, "I confess that the period of our acquaintance has been very short. Nevertheless I believe I can quickly recognize my mate instantaneously and my mate would recognize me as quickly. The flattering words you have spoken to me have convinced me that I am not mistaken in believing that you have honored me with your love, and I am sure you would not have given me to understand that you love me without proposing marriage."

Mr. Kenworthy had started to rise near the edge of the air hole and had turned in.

At the same moment Mrs. Middleton approached the couple with a young lady beside her.

"Mr. Kenworthy," she said, "I wish to present you to Miss Bliss, who was to have been your dinner companion and had not regrets from one of my invited guests caused a change at the last moment."

Kenworthy alone noticed the twinkle in the eye of Miss Steele as she gave place to Miss Bliss and walked away with the hostess. The next morning Miss Steele received a note from Mr. Kenworthy regretting the interruption of the night before and begging permission to call upon her for the purpose of making arrangements for their wedding. Miss Steele laughed heartily and replied that she had no remembrance of anything that had occurred to warrant Mr. Kenworthy's assumption, but she would be happy to see him as a valued friend.

Mr. Kenworthy spent a year trying to induce Miss Steele to marry him, but failed. It was reported that at the time of Mrs. Middleton's dinner party she was as good as engaged to the man she married, but friends who heard the story of her playing monomania said she was not quite so mean as that.

Almanacs.

Almanacs are in existence that were compiled in the fourteenth century, but they are only in manuscript. The first printed almanac was issued about the year 1475.

Men of loftier mind manifest themselves in their equitable dealings, small minded men in their going after gain.

Strength in Hollowness.

The stems of bamboos, grasses, wheat and oats are hollow, although they grow to great heights in comparison to their thickness. It might naturally be supposed that to gain strength as they grew the stems ought to be solid at the base, but it is not so. Careful experiments have proved that a solid column subject to bending strains is no stronger than a hollow one. Consequently all iron shafts which drive the screws of steamships have a hole bored down the center to reduce the weight. But this does not reduce the strength. The thickness of the branches of trees is in proportion to the weight to be borne. Horizontal branches, such as those of the cedar and elm, are much thicker than the almost vertical branches of the poplar. The average natural factor in breaking is about one in ten, exclusive of wind pressure, and engineers employ a factor of six in building with timber.

PATENTS

For information of the public we have filed for the purpose of securing Letters Patent for the following inventions: A new and improved method of securing the ends of the shafts of steamships and other machinery to the hulls of the same; a new and improved method of securing the ends of the shafts of steamships and other machinery to the hulls of the same; a new and improved method of securing the ends of the shafts of steamships and other machinery to the hulls of the same.
