Where Arbitration Cannot Govern.

Mr. Bryan's idea of the efficacy of arbitration is all right, only he seeks to give it too wide an application. When two neighbors disagree on some matter, that can be adjudged by arbitration, but when a crazed man starts to run amuck, only the law of self-preservation can be invoked. When a nation violates the law that has governed civilized nations for centuries, and sinks passenger ships without giving the passengers even a chance for their lives, then no law of arbitration has any application to the case.—Ex.

The Sea Assassin

Many people want to know what a torpedo is like. It is a devil made of steel, the latest made being twenty-one inches in diameter and nineteen ft. long. It is sent on its way by compressed air, it is propelled by an engine of its own which starts when the torpedo is shot on its way. It is held steadily on its course by a gyroscope, it has a speed of forty-five knots an hour for two thousand yards after which it slows down to as low as fifteen knots. It is divided into three or four compartments. The devil of it is like that of any other assassin—all in its head which carries from two hundred to three hundred pounds gun cotton: it is fired by an explosive in its nose, when the nose strikes any substance. The second compartment is an air chamber, which will bear a pressure of from 1,350 to 2,200 pounds per square inch. The third compartment is the balance chamber where the gyroscope is on duty. It is set on its course any where from near the surface to as low as fourteen feet below the water. Its range is over 11,000 yards. It costs from $3,000 to over $5000.—Goodwin's Weekly
