ELECTIONS IN EAST

Suffrage Defeated in Three States. Republicans Win.

Overwhelming defeat of woman suffrage in New York, Massachusetts and Pennsylvania; election of a Democratic governor in Maryland to succeed a Republican, and a Republican governor in Massachusetts to succeed a Democrat; a gain of one Republican representative (from New York) in congress in the filling of four vacancies, a close contest for the governorship in Kentucky, with the Democratic candidate leading in Ohio, were outstanding features today of the elections in 10 states yesterday.

In New York, the proposed new state constitution was rejected by a majority of approximately 400,000.

New York denied woman's plea for the ballot by a majority of approximately 200,000. Massachusetts' vote against suffrage showed a majority of 132,682. Pennsylvania's returns were slow in coming in, but indicated that the majority against suffrage would be less than first figures indicated. Estimates based on incomplete returns forecast defeat of the amendment by from 50,000 to 60,000.

Tammany Hall triumphed in New York City in the election of a district attorney for the first time in 15 years, the sheriff of New York county, and a majority of the board of all three.

The city of Toledo voted against a 25-year lease on the city's water and take over of lines controlled by the Toledo Railways & Light company.

High School Funds Not For Person Over 21.

Salem, Or., Nov. 2—Neither the county school tuition fund nor the county school fund can be drawn upon for tuition for any student over 21 years of age, according to an opinion rendered by Attorney General Brown at the request of State Superintendent of Public Instruction Connel. Only persons between the ages of 6 and 21 years come within the purview of the two laws creating the funds, he held.

IT PAID AFTER ALL

By WILLIAM CHANDLER

Bob Sanford on his way from New York to Chicago arrived Saturday night at Buffalo and discovered to his dismay that he could go no farther till the next evening. Not only was he disappointed at having to wait in a strange town over Sunday, but horror-stricken at remembering that he was short of cash, having provided just enough to take him to his journey's end. His hotel bill for one day would use up all he had, with none left for his sleeping berth to Chicago. His tickets were to that city.

Bob put up at a hotel and went to bed. In the morning he bethought himself as to how he should get away with the day and provide means for a sleeping berth for the balance of the trip, for he had no mind to sit up all night. Then suddenly he remembered that his chum, Tom Atkinson, was a Buffalo boy and his parents lived there. Tom's father had visited his son in Chicago, and Bob had been introduced to him. He might call on Mr. Atkinson, state his necessities and secure the loan of the few dollars needed.

Bob spent the morning reading the newspapers and the afternoon walking the streets. His train did not leave till 11 o'clock. After dark he plucked up courage to go to the Atkinsons for his loan. So after getting the address from a directory he turned his steps to the house. On his arrival he found the premises dimly lighted. He hesitated. He was tempted to give it up and sit up all night in a day car. But the prospect of a sleepless night urged him on, and he went up the steps and rang the bell. After waiting some time he saw the light in the hall turned higher; then a feminine voice asked who was there.

Bob was staggered. How could he explain who he was? He could not very well say that he was Tom Atkinson's friend and he had called to borrow a few dollars on the strength of that friendship. He said nothing, standing in the vestibule irresolute.

"Who's there?" asked the voice again in a more resolute tone.

Still Bob, not knowing what to say, said nothing. Then he thought he heard a light step within retreating, then returning. Suddenly the door was opened a few inches, and the muzzle of a pistol was poked through. Beyond he could distinguish the figure of a girl.

"If you think that I am alone," said a quavering voice, "you are mistaken. There are three men upstairs."

"I—have come to make a call on Mr. and Mrs. Atkinson. Do they live here?"

"Yes, they live here. They're out at church. They haven't got back yet. You can't come in."

"Certainly not if you don't wish it. May I leave a card?"

The girl made no reply to this. Bob held out a card and, poking it at the girl just below the pistol, said:

"I'm a friend of Tom Atkinson, in Chicago. Happening to be in Buffalo, I concluded to pay my respects to his parents."

"Oh, merciful goodness!" exclaimed the girl, withdrawing the weapon. "What have I done?"

"It doesn't matter," said Bob apologetically. "It's my fault anyway. I shouldn't have called so late."

"Are you Robert Sanford?"

"Yes."

"Oh, dear! Papa and mamma left me all alone, and I'm afraid of burglars. I've made a mummy of myself. Come in."

Bob entered, asking if the girl was Tom's sister, and she assured him that she was and had often heard Tom speak of his friend Mr. Sanford.

"Papa and mamma will be so complimentary that you have called on them," said Miss Atkinson, "and will be delighted to see one of Tom's intimate friends. They will be home in a few minutes. The services are over at 9, and it takes them about fifteen minutes to come from the church. Here they are now."

Bob wished it had taken them longer to come, for Tom's sister was very pretty and he would have liked a long sitting with her alone. The front door opened, and Mr. and Mrs. Atkinson, after leaving their wraps in the hall, entered.

"This is Tom's friend Mr. Sanford of Chicago," said Miss Atkinson.

"Well, upon my word!" exclaimed Mr. Atkinson. "Delighted to see you. I remember very well meeting you in Tom's rooms in Chicago."

"How nice of you to come and see us!" said Mrs. Atkinson. "I assure you we appreciate the attention."

Bob remained for an hour, during which the fond parents talked incessantly about their son, and Bob praised him to the skies. All the while he was trying to muster up courage to speak of the loan of $2 for a sleeping berth. But to tell Tom's parents in the presence of Tom's sister that he had called for that purpose was too much for him. So, saying that he must go for his train, he bade them all good-by, and, followed by a shower of thanks for the attention he had shown them in calling, he took his departure.

The next evening he appeared at Tom Atkinson's and told the story.

"Well, I'll be jured!" said Tom. "After finding death at the muzzle of a pistol you were obliged to sit up all night!"

"Yes," replied Bob, "but it was worth a night like that."

"What do you mean?"

Bob never explained till he became engaged to Miss Atkinson.
