Balzac's Way.

Jules Sandeau related that one time while living in Paris Balzac locked himself up in his room for twenty-two days and twenty-two nights, refusing to see any one and keeping the curtains closed and the lights continually burning even in broad daylight. The only human being he saw during this time was his servant, whom he rang for when he felt the need of food, which he washed down with numerous cups of coffee. He would throw himself on his bed only when entirely exhausted from lack of sleep, and he remained in complete ignorance of what was transpiring outside, the state of the weather and even of the time and day of the week. He only freed himself from this voluntary captivity when he had written the word "End" on the last page of the manuscript he began when he entered his prison.

After Death.

It is irrational to think death ends all, for then life is gone and annihilated, and it is just as though it had never been. A life can in no wise be destroyed by death. What has once been experienced is an eternal and indelible constituent of reality never more to be erased or altered. It is a foolish doubt which Kerl Moor expresses with the pistol in his hand, "If the paltry pressure of this paltry thing makes the wise man and the fool, the coward and the hero, the noble and the villain, equal." That cannot be. Death severs the thread of the earthly life, but the content of life can neither be altered nor annihilated by it. Reality is eternal in its essence. Nothing that is real can, to quote Augustus Silesius, ever perish and cease to be.—Professor Friedrich Paulsen, University of Berlin, in "A System of Ethics."
