Electric Sparks

(From Off Our Wireless)
"The Winning of the West". That is the result of Hughes' trip.
"Charlie" Hughes and "Ty" Cobb met at Detroit. Two hard hitters.
"Mr. Hughes is not saying anything" says a White House report. This probably explains the frantic effort to answer him.
We trust that no jabs will be aroused between the "Central Empires" by Senator Pearse's disclosure that Ambassador Gerard obtained his Berlin post for only $13,500 whereas Vienna was made to look like $22,000 to Mr. Pendell.
In order to reduce his weight, the average man is willing to take almost anything except exercise.
Now the fall season is upon us, and the political orators are harvesting a bumper crop of flaws.
What has become of the old fashioned man who had a brainstorm at the mention of dollar wheat?
The most dangerous humidity during a heat wave is the kind you buy in a bottle.
The Democratic leaders were about to defeat the naval programme when the President explained it to them in the light of the pork barrel measure for political purposes, whereupon it went through with a waup.
"President Wilson" says a Washington Report, "has called off Secretary McAdoo and insisted that he keep out of New York state politics. The President appears to be taking McAdoo's recent order against political activity by Treasury employees very seriously."

The office of Director of the Mint is vacant again. Those southern Congressmen in Washington are so jussy about their juleps being made just right, that if a poor fellow gets in a speck too much sugar he finds himself looking for a job.
Josephus D. Iels is such an opponent of the spoils system that he could even be willing to have the secretaryship of the navy put under the service.
After reading Mr. Hughes' Detroit speech, Mr. Wilson at last finds himself in a position to appreciate the disadvantages of unpreparedness.
Mr. Wilson now learns how it feels to be held to strict accountability.

The Art of Optimism.
Live in the active voice. Intent on what you can do rather than on what happens to you; in the indicative mood, concerned with facts as they are rather than as they might be; in the present tense, concentrated on the duty in hand without regard for the past or worry about the future; in the first person, criticizing yourself rather than condemning others; in the singular number, seeking the approval of your own conscience rather than popularity with the many. Whoever lives the life of such unselfish devotion to the good of others and of all and lives it in the active voice, indicative mood, present tense, first person, singular number, is bound to find his life full and rich and glad and free—is bound, in other words, to be an optimist.—William De Witt Hyde.

Feat of a Baseball Pitcher.
Just one pitcher in the history of baseball—that is, a hurler who was working in a league of recognized standing and class—is credited with pitching two complete games in succession wherein the opposing batsmen failed to register a base hit. A big pitcher sailing under the name of Gene Wright, who hurried for the Dayton club of the Western association back in 1901, on Sept. 1 of that season pitched a no hit, no run game against Columbus. He followed up this feat by turning the same trick against the Grand Rapids team on Sept. 4.—New York Sun.

A Warning.
"Watch out how you holler for de world" ter look up at you when you gits ter de mountain top," said Brother Williams. "Of all time dat's de one time ter lay low, fer de world" will find you when it gits good an' ready. An' dis other thing is what you got to consider: De minute you hollers old man Trouble locates you an' sets his traps ter trip you an' send you rollin' down ter de bottom, whar you come from!"—Atlanta Constitution.

Flower of the Air.
There is a plant in Chile and a similar one in Japan called the "flower of the air." It is so called because it appears to have no root and is never fixed to the earth. It twines around a dry tree or sterile rock. Each shoot produces two or three flowers like a lily—white, transparent and odoriferous. It is capable of being transported 600 to 700 miles and vegetates as it travels suspended on a twig.
Perfect Machinery.

"Yes; the wife's the governor, the children safety valves and the husband a crank."—Philadelphia Bulletin.

His Views.
"Dear me, I forgot to send her an invitation to our wedding!"
"I imagine it won't make much difference. We won't miss one pickle fork."—Kansas City Journal.

Legend of the Grand Canyon

The Grand Canyon of the Colorado was first reported to the civilized world by the early Spanish explorers in 1549. The Indian legend of the Grand canyon is picturesque. There was a great chief who mourned the death of his wife and would not be comforted. To him came Ta-Vwots, one of the Indian gods, and told him that his wife was in a happier land to which he would take him that he might see for himself if upon his return he would cease to mourn. The chief promised. Then Ta-Vwots made a trail through the mountains that guarded that beautiful land. This trail was the canyon gorge of the Colorado. Through it Ta-Vwots led the chief, and when they had returned the god exacted from the chief a promise that he would tell no one of his joys lest, through discontent with the circumstances of this world, others should desire to go there. Then Ta-Vwots rolled a river into the gorge, a mad, raging stream, that should engulf any that might attempt to enter thereby. This river was the Colorado.

Animals We Never Met.
Dr. N. A. Cobb, an authority on zoology, declares that there must be hundreds of thousands of species of nematodes, or threadworms, more than nine-tenths of which are still unknown to science. Of the parasitic nematodes infesting vertebrate animals alone it is estimated that there are at least 80,000 species. Insects, mollusks, crustaceans and other animal groups are also much infested, and as a rule a given species of nematode is peculiar to a single species of host. Lastly, the species of nematode living free in soil and water vastly outnumber the parasitic species. As these creatures are enormously prolific, the number of individuals must be quite beyond conception. Dr. Cobb estimates that in the upper foot of an arable soil the number of nematodes runs to thousands of millions an acre.—Exchange.

Panama Canal Chains.
The huge locks of the Panama canal are guarded by massive chains stretched across the channel. No vessel can crash into the gates at any of the locks because of these fenders, placed seventy feet from each gate and near the surface of the water. If the chains are struck by a boat they gradually yield to the force, paying out to a certain distance, which depends upon the violence of the impact.
The mechanisms which regulate the chain fenders are installed on either wall. A system of hydraulic cylinders is used for raising and lowering the chains. The action of the fender when struck by a boat is modified in part by the friction produced in the machinery, but mainly by the resistance produced by water flowing through valves.—Popular Science Monthly.

Making "Central's" Job Easy.
It is much more important than most people think to give the name of the telephone exchange before the number. Instead of vice versa and to be extremely particular in sounding the consonants clearly in any conversation. Also it is necessary to distinguish carefully between 5 and 9 and to say "oh" for 0 instead of "naught," which is often mistaken for 4 and sometimes, curiously enough, for 8. All these are useful memoranda which deserve to be kept in mind as steadily as that duty of courtesy to the telephone girl which is, we fear, too often forgotten.—London Globe.

Gold Bells.
Gold and copper bells served as money among the peoples of Mexico and Central America before the time of the American Indian. The gold bells of Costa Rica are exquisite examples of metal work. Many of them are modeled in the form of birds, monkeys and grotesque heads.

The Opal.
The superstition against the opal began through the stonecutters, each of whom would anxiously ask every other if he had had any luck in his cutting, for the opal contains 13 per cent water and is exceedingly brittle and therefore difficult to cut successfully.

Commercial Activity.
Little Lemuel—Say, paw, what is the meaning of "commercial activity?" Paw—Borrowing $5 for a week, son, and dodging the lender for a year.—Indianapolis Star.

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Bathing.

Authorities may vary in discussing the merits of the hot bath, the tepid bath and the cold bath, but they all agree in the abstract that bathing is necessary to good health. The removal from the skin of the accumulation of refuse matter is the primary reason for the bath.
A bath should not be taken too near mealtime. There is a normal attraction of the blood toward the stomach after eating.
Any interference with this and the attraction of the blood toward the surface of the body is apt to arrest digestion.
Warm baths have a soothing effect and often are prescribed for nervousness. The tepid bath can do no harm. Cold baths are stimulating, but apt to be injurious if the heart action is not strong enough to permit of a ready reaction. To some individuals the shock to the nervous system is so great that they cannot accustom themselves to cold baths.

Announcement of an increased programme in Japan follows significantly upon the completion of the naval appropriation bill in Congress.

But will we have to wait for the emancipated child laborers of North Carolina to attain the voting age before the United States Senate is rid of the noxious presence of Senator Overman?
