Proclamation.

Whereas, the American people have set themselves the task of raising a second Liberty Loan of from three to five billion dollars. Twentieth century war requires vast sums of money. The requirements are far beyond what the wealthiest country can raise by taxation. The great nations of Europe have been at war for three years. They have floated loan after loan successfully. It is unthinkable that this country should fail with its second loan, six months after the declaration of war; and

Whereas, failure to provide the necessary money would mean failure properly to provision and equip our troops. An army insufficiently equipped and supplied is led to unavailing slaughter. We owe to those who are to do the fighting to stand behind them loyally, to give them everything which will add to their efficiency and bring nearer the day of victory. Let us not fight this war half heartedly, with one hand behind our backs. Let us fight it manfully in a manner worthy the best traditions of the Republic; and

Whereas Oregon's share of the fund required is sixteen and a half to twenty million dollars. This is a sum too large to be raised without the co-operation of the whole people. Every Oregonian with an income should consider it a duty and a privilege to purchase one or more bonds, in proportion to his means. The Government asks us not to contribute, but to invest. There is no safer investment in the world than a loan to the United States;

Now, therefore, by virtue of the authority in me vested, as Governor of the State of Oregon, I, James Withycombe, Governor, do hereby proclaim the week of October 14th to 20th, 1917, as Patriotic Week. Oregon has thus far responded to every appeal. We have given the flower of our young manhood. Let us not be a sordid people. Let us not place greater store by our money than by our men. If our people can only be aroused to the necessities of the situation we cannot fail to have the cooperation which will spell success.

In Testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the Seal of the State of Oregon to be hereunto affixed this 10th day of October, A. D. 1917.

JAMES WITHYCOMBE
Governor.

Pledge Card Week Oct. 21-28.

Pledge Card Week takes place between October 21st and 28th. Every loyal housewife should be willing and glad to promise co-operation with the Food Administration Department. We can render efficient service by using home grown supplies, which will save transportation, by practicing the gospel of the clean plate, by cooking no more than necessary, by using corn or rye bread for at least one meal each day, by substituting chicken, rabbit or fish in place of beef and pork, by boiling and baking more and frying less.

Remember that the person who wastes food during war time is giving aid and comfort to the enemy. This war will not be won on the battle line alone but on the bread line as well, and every one of us can be soldiers in the fight for conserving our food supplies.

The united co-ordinated effort of the Nation will win the war. Do your part and get others to do likewise.

Entry Into War Is Expected By Swiss.

Berne, Oct. 10—In answer to proposals that a special furlough be granted to Swiss soldiers who are agriculturists General Ulrich Wille, commander of the Swiss army, replied: "America's entry into the war greatly increases the possibility that the war will receive a new and final impetus in the spring. If so, the danger that we will be drawn into the war becomes greater than ever."

Skim Milk Not Used According to Its Value.

O. A. C. Corvallis, Oct. 9—Skim milk has many uses that appeal to those who are familiar with its nutritious qualities. It is used to great advantage in combination with other food materials, especially in cooking. It is too valuable to be wasted, says Miss Inez Borth, of O. A. C.

It adds quality as well as food value, and used in bread in place of water it adds as much tissue building material as is contained in one egg. In the preparation of cereals it is still more important because it is three or four times the amount of the cereals. Used instead of water to cook a cupful of cereal in three cups of liquid, it adds as much protein as is contained in three eggs.

By combining skim milk with the juice and pulp of vegetables, many dishes may be prepared of these vegetable milk soups. The raw vegetable is chopped up and cooked in a double boiler with the milk. It is then thickened with flour or some cereal and enriched with butter or other fat. Try the following milk chowder:

Milk Chowder
In making rich chowder the proportions are:
2 cups milk
1 cup potatoes cut in small pieces
1 pound fish

The flavoring is onions and fat from salt pork. It is possible to reduce the amount of fish or leave it out entirely, and use small portions of left-overs or corn.

71 Home Counties Are Against Senator.

Madison, Wis., Oct. 10—At a conference here last night of representatives of 71 county councils of defense in Wisconsin a resolution was passed calling for the resignation of Senator Robert M. La Follette and declaring that his attitude toward questions of the war is "aiding and abetting the enemy." "This city is the home of Senator La Follette."

Well Over Thousand Feet Deep Near Bend.

Bend, Or., Oct. 11—Water at a depth of 1015 feet has been struck on the ranch of Stanley Smith near Pine Mountain. The drilling crew began work last fall and the well will cost about $4000. It is probably the deepest in this part of the state. The water is milky white and is thought to be heavily impregnated with sulphur.

Crippled Submarine Sighted By Danes.

Copenhagen, Oct. 11—A large submarine was observed today passing through the Little Belt Southward in a badly damaged condition. Both port and starboard quarters and the stern of the submarine gave evidence of a severe engagement.

Economical Roasting.
The following will commend itself as an inexpensive way of roasting a small piece of mutton or beef without heating the oven:

Place in a saucepan large enough to hold the meat chosen about a cupful of bacon dripping, lard or margarine. Make this hot, place meat into it and brown well on both sides. Then turn gas jet down very low and allow it to cook until done. Three undivided lamb chops done in this way require one teaspoonful of cold water added to the dripping before the chops are put in or the meat might burn. But beef does not need the addition of water, as it is moist in itself. The chops take about fifteen minutes to cook, one and one-half pounds topside of beef a little longer. When the meat is done put it on the platter, pour away some of the dripping and then make the gravy in the usual way.

Parsnips, onions and other vegetables may be roasted in the same way. —E. Louts Post-Dispatch.

Voltaire's Retort.
That famous politician, orator and man of fashion, the fourth earl of Chesterfield, was on one occasion at a grand assembly in France where Voltaire was one of the guests. Suddenly the French writer accosted his lordship with the words:

"My lord, I know you are a judge. Which are the more beautiful, the English or the French ladies?"

"Upon my word," replied Chesterfield, with his usual presence of mind, "I am no judge of paintings!"

Some time afterward, says a biographer, Voltaire, being in London, happened to be at a nobleman's party with Chesterfield. A lady in the company prodigiously roused directed her whole discourse to Voltaire and engrossed his conversation. Chesterfield came up, tapped him on the arm and said:

"Sir, take care that you are not captivated."

"My lord," promptly replied the French wit, "I scorn to be taken by an English craft under French colors."

TWO ROSES

By WARREN MILLER

During the old plantation days in the southern states dueling was quite a common way of settling disputes between gentlemen. In the north the practice had almost entirely died out.

The middle of the nineteenth century marked the culmination of the plantation system. Till that period men clung to customs they had inherited from the cavalier settlers of Virginia. Ten years later all was changed by the war between the states. In 1850 there stood on the James river not far from Richmond one of those manor houses in which resided the typical southern planter. The house is there today, but the system that was in vogue among those who lived in it has passed away. Richard Carlton was at the time I mentioned the patriarchal head of a lovely family of boys and girls and a thousand slaves. This story pertains only to his second daughter, Alice.

When Alice was eighteen years old she was courted by the sons of the neighboring planters. She was of a romantic disposition and not inclined to give herself to any man save one who would do daring deeds to win her. Two young men, Reginald Fitz Hugh and Willard Fairfax, became the favorites with Miss Alice. She was not in love with either, but she liked both. And they were both worthy of her. She engaged herself to both. Why she did this she hardly knew herself, but it is probable that her principal object was to learn which would fight for her. She pledged each one to keep the secret of the engagement till she was ready to announce it herself.

One morning the rivals met. They were on horseback riding along the road that bordered the north bank of the James river. Each wore a red rose in his buttonhole. They were friends and stopped for a chat. Each noticed especially the rose worn by the other. "Did you decorate yourself?" asked Fitz Hugh of Fairfax, "or did your fair lady give you the rose?" "A fair lady. And yours?" "I, too, must plead guilty of being favored by a lovely woman."

They spoke of other matters, but each was thinking about the other's rose. "Come, Willard," asked Fitz Hugh presently; "if you tell me who gave you your rose I will reciprocate."

"There is no reason why I should withhold the lady's name," replied the other. "I was favored by Alice Carlton."

Fitz Hugh's cheek flushed scarlet. He had the evening before been accepted as Alice's fiancé. "You lie!" he replied angrily.

To give the lie at that period among southern gentlemen meant a duel. Fairfax looked at Fitz Hugh in astonishment, then put spurs to his horse and rode on without even asking an explanation.

That afternoon Alice Carlton's maid, Phoebe, came to her room to dress her hair. While thus engaged the maid said:

"I heard someone just now, Miss Alice."

"What did you hear?" "I think Mars Reggie Fitz Hugh and Mars Willard Fairfax are going to fight."

Alice's heart stood still. "Why do you think that?" she asked. "I was servin' a julep to yo' father and Colonel Archer and I heard 'em talkin' about it."

When young persons are brought face to face with tragic results of their romantic designs they are apt to quail. Alice Carlton sat outwardly calm, but inwardly she was in a terrible fright.

She directed her maid to finish her coiffure with dispatch, then ordered her saddle horse and rode away. Her course indicated which of the rivals had first place in her heart. She went to Fitz Hugh. Fortunately she found him before reaching his home.

"Reginald," she said, "I have heard there is trouble between you and Willard Fairfax. What does it mean?" "Willard was this morning wearing a rose similar to the one you gave me. He told me that you had given it to him. This was to accuse you of duplicity. You surely would not have given the same token you gave me on the very day of our engagement. I told him he lied."

Alice paled. She knew what it was for one southern gentleman to give another the lie. But this was not all. For the first time she realized what she had done in engaging herself to two men on the same day. There was but one course for her to pursue—a confession.

"I gave him the rose," she said in an almost inaudible voice and with her eyes bent on the ground.

"You gave it to him?" "Yes, I have been a very silly girl. I not only gave it to him, but I accepted him as I accepted you."

Fitz Hugh stood like a statue. "Forgive me, Reginald. I wished to see if you would fight for me."

The two remained silent, Fitz Hugh regarding her intently. Then he turned away.

"Excuse me," he said. "I must go and apologize to—my friend."

There was a cutting tone in the last two words. It indicated that the girl had ceased to be his friend. When Alice met him again he did not refer to what had passed between them. When she met Fairfax again he was studiously polite. Neither ever again courted her. She died unmarried, bitterly ruling the folly of her youth.

Youth Thought Killed In Wreck Writes Home.

Pendleton, Or., Oct. 10—Mourning by his parents as dead in a train wreck last April, and ordered buried, by the mother, in a lone grave in a strange Ohio town, Harold Dunn, of Pendleton is today found to be alive and happy.

Like the story of a mystery run the events of the past six months in the Dunn family. On Saturday came word from the boy, on a post card dated October 1 and posted in Portland, Me., which dispels all doubt in the minds of his parents, who are overjoyed with the wonderful news of the return of their son as one from the dead.
