Proud of The Old Town.

The following letter from Clarence Reames to Lewis Ulrich was received this week:

Portland, Oct. 29, 1917.

My dear Lewis:

I do not know who is responsible for it, but we who live in Portland were certainly proud of the old town of Jacksonville when the returns were coming in. We watched the result as closely as we watched the result of a national election. It looked for a while as though Jacksonville was going to lead the entire state.

I was due to make a speech at Jacksonville to close the campaign, but at the last minute I got mixed up with a conspiracy fraud case and could not get away. You people in the old town can never understand or realize the attention that has been directed to Jacksonville on account of this Liberty Bond campaign. The work done by Jacksonville was talked over in the banks, at headquarters, at luncheons, and wherever men congregated and talked of the bond issue. I do not know who to thank for this but I would appreciate it if you would try and see all of the good people who were responsible for it and tell them that the government extends its best congratulations and its most grateful thanks for the splendid work.

Sincerely, your friend,
CLARENCE L. REAMES

Electric Sparks

The American people will be in "a generous mood" when they have finished the job properly.

Wouldn't it be an awful fate to be devoured by Count Reventlow?

Boston Transcript: "We know of nothing so calculated to end the reign of the short skirt as its advocacy as an economy measure." Short as it is, the Transcript surely would not have it abdicate?

Paper table cloths are used at some of the best Berlin restaurants. Now that is a triumph over those war brides who object to their husbands reading the news at breakfast. Serve your cereal and serial at the same time.

If Germany had kept all its bribe money at home the value of the German mark would be higher.

Hardly anybody now expects to win the war merely cheering the flag at the moving picture show.

Bernstorff may be shrewd in some things but he certainly bought a great many diplomatic gold bricks.

German diplomats seem to talk in their sleep.

Field Marshal Haig has now done as well as the Light Brigade. Just about half a league onward.

The Germans at last admit that the British penetrated their lines. And so does the topography of the vicinity.

In a Chinese Home.

The most wonderful thing about a Chinese house is the spirit of peace which seems to pervade it. The courtyards, inclosed by houses which are in turn surrounded by high walls, have an air of security and seclusion which is not to be found in our western homes. Into these peaceful courtyards the noise of the busy world does not penetrate. The triple doors seem to shut out the storms of the world and its troubles. So says Luther Anderson in his book on Asia. In the more pretentious houses some of the courtyards are transformed into miniature landscape gardens. There are miniature mountains, precipices, lotus ponds, bridges, grottoes and rustic nooks. The irregular rocks are so well fitted together and built up against the sides of the house that they seem to have been placed there by nature long before the houses were erected. The proportions are so carefully worked out that everything seems to be larger than it really is. And the arrangement is so irregular that nature is simulated to perfection.

Three Fighters.

Walter Scott has not many recorded fights at school, but, in spite of his lameness, he was always in the thick of the "bickers," or street fights, with the boys of the town.

Byron was a great fighter at Harrow. He was very unpopular at first among his schoolfellows, until he fought his way into their affections, and then he became a veritable champion and leader.

Keats was a great fighter. He was chiefly remembered at school for his beautiful face, his kindness of heart and his pugnacious disposition. His school chum, Edward Holmes, says "he had a penchant for fighting. He would fight any one, morning, noon or night, his brother among the rest." He did not make friends easily, although everybody coveted his friendship.

The Cat in the Adage.

The adage referred to in "Macbeth," act I, scene 7, "like the poor cat I' the adage" has been identified in one of John Heywood's proverbs, a source from which is derived much of what is best in our gnomie literature. Heywood's proverb reads, "The cat would eat fish and would not wet her feet." This seems a satisfactory source of Shakespeare's:

Letting I dare not wait upon I would, Like the poor cat I' the adage.

Early as Heywood is he borrowed the adage from yet earlier sources, for it is found in a manuscript of the middle thirteenth century preserved in Trinity college, Cambridge, in the rude version, "Cat bitat visch, ac he nele his feth wete."—New York Sun.

Sham Walls of a Cathedral.

St. Paul's cathedral will drop from seventh to ninth place among the world's largest churches when Liverpool cathedral and the Church of St. John the Divine in New York are finished.

The others are St. Peter's, Rome; Milan cathedral, Cordova cathedral, Seville cathedral, Cologne cathedral and York minster.

The height of St. Paul's to the top of the cross is 390 feet—forty-seven feet lower than St. Peter's, Rome. To the ridge of the roof is 119 feet, to the balustrading of the stone gallery is 292 feet, and to the golden gallery is exactly 100 feet higher.

From a purely architectural point of view, St. Paul's is far more beautiful than St. Peter's or, indeed, any Italian cathedral. The dome in particular is the finest in the world.

The chief fault lies in the fact that the whole of the exterior is practically a sham. The inner dome is sixty-five feet lower than the outer. For half their height the side walls form no part of the cathedral at all, for they only serve to conceal the difference in altitude between the side aisles and the central one.—London Opinion.

Wrist Watches in War.

Why all officers wear wrist watches in trench warfare was explained by an army official. He described an advance from the trenches as an illustration, telling how every move was made on a prearranged schedule, the artillery throwing a curtain of fire for a certain number of seconds, while the infantry advanced twenty yards, then lifting it to twenty yards further ahead, while the infantry made another advance, and so on.

"All this shell fire," he said, "is being done by artillery far behind. The artillery officer depends most of all upon his watch. He sits with a telephone glued to his ear and field glasses in his hands. He has no time to be fumbling for his watch. A minute's error in changing the range would mean that the shells would be falling into his own advancing troops. Nor has the officer leading his men across No Man's Land any time to be fumbling for his watch."

Kept His Head.

An ambassador of the great Charlemagne while visiting a court in the east, ignorant of a law of the king that condemned to death any one who moved a dish at table before the tyrant was served, committed this offense. "Great king," said the ambassador, "I die without a murmur; but, in the name of the great emperor whose servant I am, I beg of your majesty one favor before I die." The request was granted. "Give me the eyes of every man who saw me commit the crime." "It is well," said the king. "Their eyes shall be plucked out for thee." But no one admitted he had seen the ambassador move the dish, not even the king. "Then why should I die, great king?" asked the ambassador. "The deed cannot be proved against me." The king was pleased and forthwith pardoned the ambassador.

Easy to Keep Afloat.

If every person knew that it is impossible to sink if one keeps his arms under water and moves his legs as if he were going upstairs and that one may keep this motion up for hours before fatigue ends it there would be few casualties. Such is the fact. Except where cramp renders motion impossible the man who gets an involuntary ducking has small chance of drowning. He can generally keep afloat until rescuers appear. The people who drown are those who frantically wave their arms out of water and lose their self possession.

The Other Side.

"Young man," said the office manager, "if you knew as much about the business of this firm as you do about baseball you'd be holding down my job."

"I know that, sir," replied the office boy. "And if you'd make your business as interesting as baseball you'd have kids beggin' for a chance to work for you and willing to pay for the privilege."—New York World.

He Knew How It Felt.

The Teacher—So Dallah cut Samson's hair and all his strength went out of him. Now, when did Samson's strength go out of him? You may answer, Willie. Willie—I guess it wuz when he seen hisself in th' glass.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Offensive Breath.
When the breath is offensive and the tongue coated it is time to make a reduction in the daily rations. Meat, eggs and sweets of all kinds should be omitted for a few days and only fruit and bran bread eaten. A diet of just fruit and bran bread and with milk as the only beverage soon corrects the conditions which caused the coating of the tongue and tinting of the breath. Plenty of water should be taken between meals. Eight or ten glasses a day are needed to freshen and cleanse the organs of digestion. There is need usually for a laxative medicine every day too. This may be citrate of magnesia or a dose of rochele salts (two teaspoonfuls in a glass of cold water) upon rising in the morning. If there is hunger between meals apples or other fruit may be eaten to relieve it.

GEORGE R. LINDLEY
Executor of the estate of Olaf Rye Bjerregaard, deceased.

It is about time for the Government to conscript labor. It has conscripted the young men, it has conscripted capital, and now it is time for Congress to pass a law authorizing the Government to conscript every man, if necessary, who can do manual labor. Many of them are refusing to "do their bit."

Keep That Dollar of Yours In Sight

When you spend your dollar in town you SEE WHERE IT GOES.

It stays IN TOWN. It will COME BACK TO YOU in some way.

When you spend it out of town it is gone, NEVER TO RETURN.

You KEEP YOUR EYE on Your Dollar When You TRADE WITH THE HOME MERCHANT.

This is the cunning as well as the knitting season, but even the most timorous patriot need not fear that next winter he will find a sock in his chili sauce.
