A Glimpse of Lisbon.

Lisbon leaves the definite impression of a gay, bright capital, if not of a truly beautiful city. Beautiful it certainly is by nature, seated on its lofty hills overlooking the Tagus and interspersed everywhere with semitropical gardens and lawns, but its newer houses are too rectangular, too lacking in imagination, to make anything but rather monotonous streets. Even the Praca do Comercio, though laid out upon a truly magnificent scale, fails to arouse enthusiasm.

This is the city's aspect to the casual visitor who devotes but a day or two to its sights. But to one who is willing to give it a week or more it holds many attractions. The seeker for the picturesque will delight in the water front in the morning hours and in the fisher folk—the men in black bag caps and knee breeches; the women, barefoot, setting out with basket on head to trot the city streets. These fishwives are the most picturesque of the Lisbon types, and most of them are really beautiful. The fine oval of their faces, their smooth complexions and lustrous, almond shaped eyes recalling the Mauresques and clearly bespeaking their oriental origin. — Ernest Peixotto in Scribner's.

The Female Housefly. A female house fly which has hibernated in a dwelling house, or elsewhere, may produce in the spring, at the lowest estimate, 120 eggs. Assuming that one-half of these hatch as females, and allowing that the breeding goes on without check for four months we have as the descendants of a single hibernating individual 24,557,843,223,000,000,000,000 flies. Now, a house fly measures exactly one-fourth of an inch in length; the distance around the earth at the equator is said to be 24,800 miles. It would take, therefore, 3,688,312,000 flies placed end to end to go around the world once. Using this number as a denominator, and the number of flies produced in four months from one mother as a numerator, we find she will give rise, in the course of a summer, to enough flies to encircle the globe at the equator 5,000 times and have plenty of progeny to spare. — Professor F. L. Washburn in Popular Science Monthly.

ROMANTIC CAREER OF FRENCH NURSE

Marriage Brings to Light Details of Her Work.

TAKEN PRISONER BY HUNS

Nurses German Wounded With Same Care She Had Shown Her Own—Exchanged and Sent Back to France It Comes Her Turn to Suffer, and From This Comes Romance Just Culminated.

Paulette Colly is married, and her marriage brings to light the details of her heroic and romantic career of the last three years as presented by the foreign news bureau of the woman's committee of the council of national defense.

And Then the War Came. And then when she was twenty-two the war came. Seventeen days after war broke out she was at a hospital at Autheil, a volunteer Red Cross nurse in a formation of English and Italian women.

All year she continued in the wearing but grateful duties of a nurse. Her group had station for heroism at Creuse, Notre Dame de Lorette, and Neuville Saint Vaast. In 1915 her ambulance was in the sector of Notre Dame de Lorette. The battle came close to them, then enclosed them. Paulette and seven of her companions were taken prisoner by the Germans. For 48 hours they were within the enemy lines, and nursed German wounded with the same care they had shown their own. Fortunately they were exchanged and sent back to their dear France. On their return from being prisoners, they were given the Croix de Guerre.

Paulette took up her work again at once, and in 1916 was at Verdun. She was also at the tunnel at the Forest of Corbeaux, and many other places that have become famous in history where the fighting was hottest, and consequently the work of the nurses the hardest. She nursed hundreds of prisoners with equal care, tenderness and devotion, but one man, Rene Brichen, who lost his right arm in the war and who was nursed by her, became especially dear to her during his illness and convalescence. He was sent out of the hospital with no prospects and seriously handicapped in providing even for himself by the loss of his arm.

Her Turn to Suffer. By this time, as Paulette herself said, very simply: "It came my time to suffer." She succumbed to typhoid fever, and during her convalescence she had appendicitis. It meant five and a half weary months in a hospital for the active young nurse. But when the five and a half months were over, and Paulette was able to be out again, Rene Brichen had learned to write with his left hand, and had secured the position he had formerly had with a bank. They have just been married, and it is absolutely certain that they should live happily ever after. They have had the complete story-book beginning to their romance, and it is no more than fair that they should round out the plot.

WANT SOAPLESS DAYS

New War Propaganda by Young Virginia Lad. A new war propaganda that is certain to be taken up enthusiastically by young America was given a start in Huntington, W. Va., by Jimmy Wallen, a schoolboy, who has been active in the different war activities. Wallen, who is always sly and spon, suggests a "soapless day," saying it is easy to keep clean without using soap one day a week. The "soapless day" would help conserve fats so badly needed by the allies, Jimmy declared.

HOPS A TOBACCO SUBSTITUTE

Germans Find They "Act and Taste" Much Like Real Weed. From Frankfurt comes the report that old hops, of which at least 800,000 pounds have been collected recently, are perhaps to be used in Germany as a substitute for tobacco which grows increasingly scarce. It is asserted that chemical investigations have proved that by a method of preparation the hops act and taste much like tobacco and can be used without even a mixture of tobacco.

Caught Rabbit in Mine.

Rabbit hunting 80 feet below the surface of the ground was the experience of George Williams, mine boss at Crawford No. 12 mine, at Brazil, Ind. When Williams was preparing to leave the mine after a day's work he noticed a rabbit sitting beside the bottom of the shaft. Using a candle-lamp he blinded the rabbit and easily captured it.

"The Only Son of His Mother"

Crape tied with black hung from the door knob of the little frame cottage. All through the long, blue, brilliant autumn day there had been a trickle of humanity up and down those sagging steps. Men and women had walked sedately up and as decorously descended, for the friends of Henry Carson had been many.

There were reasons for his popularity. He had been a kindly and generous man, broad of vision, warm of heart, gentle of soul. Life was more glowing for those who warmed their hands at the hearth of his friendship. At one time he had been wealthy.

In his own home he had been adored. In him had been no trace of the pettiness that brands that most despicable of creatures, the domestic tyrant. All that skill, love, money, tenderness could do had been attempted to aid the only boy in the household of girls. A hopeless, an incurable invalid since infancy, his sixteen years had been punctuated by periods of suffering so intense that even those who cherished him could not have rebelled for his own poor, tortured sake had the order for release come from the court of final appeal.

So it was that when his hale, handsome, hearty father, who had left home that morning in the prime of robust manhood, was carried back, dead, the deepest sense of deprivation was experienced by the one who would miss him most in the dark hours from which he covered with such cruel apprehension.

While the exhausted sobbing of the widow and the frightened wailing of the little children resounded, while black clad strangers noiselessly intent upon their solemn duties, came and went; while neighbors, offering sympathy and condolence, flocked into the little room, he moved silently among them, a tall, attenuated lad with a set, pale face and eyes of impenetrable melancholy.

Alone in the darkened front room as the glorious day waned, he watched the corners growing mystically dim in the twilight and the long box on the trestle looming blacker in the encroaching shadows. Save for that other peaceful presence the boy was alone in the room. From his screened solitude in the window recess he saw his mother come in. She approached the coffin. He noticed how worn and shaken she looked in the flickering light of the candles. She stood there, the shawl hanging loosely from her shoulders, her arms fallen straight by her sides. She seemed overwhelmed by the utter lassitude of spent grief.

"Mary," cried a woman's voice, poignant with sympathy, "oh, Mary!" The widow turned with a start, recognized the newcomer. A choking sound broke from her as she ran into the arms of her girlhood friend. "Mary, I only this afternoon read the notice in the paper. I came as quickly as I knew, as I could. My dear, my dear, don't cry so! don't! It must have been a dreadful shock, of course, being so sudden at—the last; but, believe me, it is better as it is, far better. I know it is hard for you to think so now, but you will come to realize it."

The stricken woman drew back, staring wildly at her friend. "Oh, you will come to know it is for the best. He could never have been well or happy or fill a man's place in the world. Although you all concealed it from him as well as you could, he must have suspected what an anxiety he was to you, what a drag, what a burden. And there was no possibility of his ever being less a heartache to you. Oh, I know what you would say. The torrent of her eager speech swept away the other's ineffective effort to protest. "But I speak as the old friend who loves you dearly. It is better for you all that he is dead. Think if instead of that poor, useless boy it had been his strong, fine father who had been taken! Then, indeed—"

An outburst of tempestuous weeping checked her. "Hush, oh, hush! Don't you—don't you know—" "My God, Mary, you don't mean—The paper said—the same name—" The widow pointed to the coffin. Then she huddled to the floor beside it and crouched there, her face hidden in her shawl. When she had left the room the boy rose wearily. He walked slowly and like one grown old. In that uncertain circle of tawny light he paused. His young face, sanctified and spiritualized by suffering, leaned over that other in the black box below. Its benign calmness almost taunted him. His own countenance, white and working, dimmed his sister when she met him at the door. She cried out at sight of him. "Harry, you are going to be ill!" Her voice shook with concern. "You are going to have one of your bad attacks, I am sure!" "Oh, no, dear." There was infinite sadness in the mournful eyes that met her own. "Don't worry," he besought her. "Mother needs you."
